30 Dead, Nearly 100 Missing on Long Island

Yacht Sinks With Half of 26 Aboard Missing
At Least 20 Are Killed at Westhampton
Guards Called to Prevent Looting
Ferryboat Unreported With 29 Persons

By the Associated Press.

At least 127 persons were known dead and scores were missing today in the wake of a devastating hurricane that last night swept over Long Island and New England. A Coast Guard officer was unable to estimate the loss of life on Long Island. The storm hit hardest around Westhampton, where, it was reported, scores of bodies were washed ashore.

Six Bodies Washed Up

Property damage ran into the millions. Thousands of square miles of rich lands were inundated, houses were swept away, electric light systems were paralyzed and highways were flooded in the furious grasp of the storm.

Commander William M. Wolfe, of the Coast Guard, reported "a severe loss of life" in the area from Moriches to Easthampton, over which sea water poured. At least six bodies were found.

Besides 30 known dead, nearly 100 persons were missing from various Long Island communities, these including 29 passengers and crew members on the missing ferry boat, Park City, and half of the 26 fishermen aboard the yacht, Ocean View, which sank in Long Island Sound.

Coast Guard headquarters at Boston reported 26 men missing on the Massachusetts coast, coast guardsmen lost in an attempted rescue off Cape Cod. Massachusetts State Police said 23 persons were missing at Fair Haven, on Cape Cod.

The known death toll by States was Massachusetts, 37; Connecticut, 21; Rhode Island, 32; New York, 30; New Hampshire, 7. Total, 127.

Thousands Driven From Homes

A State fire warden said he saw 13 bodies in ruins of houses at Westhampton. Seven others were washed up on the beach. He said 200 houses were damaged or destroyed.

The Coast Guard cutter General Green at Woods Hole, Mass., reported at least 15 persons missing in that Cape Cod town.

Sweeping up from the South, the lashing wind and rain sideswiped New Jersey, swept through New York and Long Island and then for many hours gathered and spent its fury on New England.

Some of the most populous centers of the country were struck—New Haven, Hartford, Boston, Providence—and thrown into chaos, cut off from the outside world.

Power, light and communications were wiped out, thousands driven from their homes and damage ran to untold millions.

In New Hampshire, four women were killed as a bridge crumbled into the roaring Piscataquog River.

Dozen Cities Crippled

In Providence, R. I., sale winds tore roofs from downtown buildings and rains marooned thousands. Water stood four feet deep in the Providence Journal building.

The entire city of New London, Conn., was threatened by flames as six fires raged uncontrolled for several hours. Swirling flood waters hampered firemen.

Ten city blocks along the New London waterfront, including parts of the main business section, were demolished and 1,000 families were homeless, the Coast Guard reported—Editor's note.]

At Atlantic City, N. J., mountainous seas wiped out the bridge to the community of Brigantine, marooning 600 families.

Hartford, Conn., hit by two flood disasters in 11 years, worked frantically to stave off the menacing waters of the Connecticut River, which was expected to hit 12 feet above flood stage today.

A dozen New England cities were crippled as lights and telephones went out, fire and police alarm systems broke down, fallen trees blocked rescue workers and panic seized citizens.

In Boston Harbor four big ships, one of them "Old Ironsides," were torn from their moorings. Smaller craft by the hundreds all along the coast were blown away.

Officers Halt Looting

A landslide swept a 22-car freight train into the river at Deerfield, Mass. The crew escaped.

High winds demolished a 700-foot freight shed at New Haven. The storm reached west to Brattleboro, Vt., tearing down trees and wires.

Nantucket Island, 30 miles off the coast, struggled in darkness. In nearly all the States affected, Governors declared states of emergency and called out the National Guard. Officers halted looting of jewelry stores in Woonsocket.

Massachusetts proclaimed a fuel and food emergency and allotted $25,000 for immediate flood relief work.

Stringent food shortages were foreseen for today because of damage to roads and railroads throughout the territory. In Connecticut alone, more than 40 bridges on arterial highways were carried away.

Storm warnings had been sounded along the coast for several days as the hurricane formed off Florida and slowly pushed north. But there was little preparation for the suddenness and force with which it veered inland and smashed the Northeastern area.

Bronx Subway Tied Up

A few Coast Guard boats were rushed north from New York and New Jersey, but the rest were soon pressed into service for rescue work at home as the tail-end of the storm smashed the north central States.

Rising waters in up-State New York brought fears there of a Hudson River flood. The State Barge Canal was closed and more than 70 boats tied up.

New York City fought its fourth day of steady rain as the storm reached its height. Power failure halted a division of the City Independent Subway system in the Bronx, leaving hundreds of passengers in darkness.

Five 300-foot steel towers of the Radio Communications, Inc., at Riverhead, on Long Island, were blown over.

Flood waters added heavily to storm deaths and damage. In Providence, scores of shoppers and theater patrons were trapped in parked automobiles and had to swim to safety. An 18-year-old girl was killed in downtown Providence when a brick wall fell on the auto in which she was riding.

In Woonsocket, R. I., 25 National Guardsmen with bayonets drawn restored order after youthful looters invaded jewelry and dress stores, winning the emergency, 25 percent of the entire personnel of the

Crash Kills Westover, Army Air Corps Chief

Sergeant Also Dies
Their Plane Burns
General Served Here
Called 'No. 1 Flier'

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Burbank, Calif., Sept. 21—Major Gen. Oscar Westover, one of the Army's first fliers—an enlisted man who rose from the ranks to chief of the Army Air Corps—was killed today when the plane he was flying crashed within sight of the Union Air Terminal on the city's outskirts. Killed with him was Army Sgt. Sam Hynes, his regular pilot. Both bodies were burned almost beyond recognition.

The general apparently was attempting to land the Northrop pursuit plane when it crashed, according to the War Department.

Gen. Westover was 55, short, stocky, with graying hair, he was recognized as the Army's "No. 1 flier."

The Air Corps head, a veteran of 37 years in the Army, left Bolling Field in Washington last week to attend the American Legion Convention at Los Angeles.

According to Union Terminal officials, who had sighted Gen. Westover's plane a moment before it crashed, the ship was circling above a large plant of the Lockheed Aircraft Corporation.

Approximately 600 yards from the aircraft factory, the plane leveled into a landing glide. It was flying low over a group of bungalows on San Fernando road, about 100 feet above the street.

The general apparently saw he was going to be unable to clear the buildings and attempted a rapid climb, witnesses reported.

The engine stalled and there was a spurt of flame from a backfire. The plane went into a spin and dropped into the group of houses. The wreckage caught fire immediately and two of the buildings were soon in flames.

Reports from the first rescuers to reach the crash said the body of Gen. Westover was thrown clear. Sgt. Hynes was pinned in the smashed and twisted framework.

New Dealer Ready to Head House Rules

O'Connor Blocked Bills
Sabath Next in Line
White House Rejoices

White House circles yesterday hailed the defeat of Representative O'Connor, first of the "purge" targets to lose re-nomination as preparations were made for O'Connor's powerful post as chairman of the Rules Committee to be taken over by a 100 per cent New Deal supporter.

Representative Sabath, of Illinois, born a Czech, said at Chicago, he would accept the chairmanship, to which he is entitled under regular procedure.

It was O'Connor's blocking or delaying of some of the New Deal measures that caused him to be marked by President Roosevelt for elimination from the House as an "obstructionist." His hostile attitude toward the holding company "death sentence" measure, the wage-hour bill and reorganization project led to the break with the Administration, though his brother, Basil O'Connor, formerly was Mr. Roosevelt's law partner.

Incidentally, the White House revealed yesterday that President Roosevelt had been wrong in his forecast of the O'Connor-Fay result. He had predicted O'Connor would win by 500 votes.

While O'Connor lost the Democratic nomination to James H. Fay, backed by the President, by 533 votes—8,352 to 7,799—he won the Republican nomination over Allen W. Dulles, with a vote of 2,933 to 1,969. There was immediate speculation on what course he would pursue.

To run as a Republican after his long public career as a Democrat would place him in an odd role. There was some talk that he might enter the general election campaign as an independent, counting on his

GPO Workers Move to End Cafe Strike

Unions Adopt Plan
Will Ask Negotiation
Space Used for Storage

Stepping into the role of hungry customers, union workers in the Government Printing Office prepared last night to seek reopening of the cafeteria, closed by a three-day strike and by a later order of the Public Printer.

Through the presidents of their unions, the employees today will ask the Public Printer and officials of the striking union to resume negotiations as the first step toward rescinding the order which closed the cafeteria.

The presidents of the dozen unions with representation in the printing office adopted this program at a meeting in the Typographical Temple. Pointing out that it is a great inconvenience to have the cafeteria closed after it has been in operation many years, William H. Hagner, president of the pressmen's union, explained that the committee of union presidents would simply seek adjustment of the strike, without recommending how it should be adjusted.

Garland Webb, business agent for the striking local 781 of the Hotel and Restaurant Employees Alliance, welcomed the action of the union officials in trying to bring things to a head, but declared the strikers would rather look for other jobs than continue with conditions they have been working under.

Earlier the strike appeared near collapse with the announcement the cafeteria space was being used and would continue to be used for an indefinite time for needed storage space.

Russell H. Herrell, administrative assistant to the Public Printer, announced it was likely the cafeteria would be closed permanently, since storage space is badly needed in the building.

Coast Guard Fights to Save Gale Victims; 4 of Men Lost

Terrific winds sweeping in from the Atlantic Ocean left 500 to 700 boats sinking, stranded or washed ashore in the New York and Long Island Sound area. Coast Guard headquarters here reported last night.

Most of the vessels were small fishing, pleasure or work craft. To meet the emergency, 25 percent of the entire personnel of the

Sudeten Return

By the Associated Press.

Eger (Thursday), Sept. 22—Sudeten Germans last night took over power in sections of Czechoslovak territory close to the frontier. They disarmed gendarmes and customs officials and ripped up border posts.

Asch, the home of Konrad Henlein, the Sudeten German Fuehrer, was completely in the hands of his followers.

Police Disarmed

The Sudeten Vigilance Corps stormed police and gendarme headquarters shortly before midnight, disarming the Czechs.

All police and gendarmes on night service were being held under guard at their respective headquarters.

The Vigilance Corps likewise occupied the Czech customs houses, disarming the customs guards, who were taken into German territory.

Fearing the Czechoslovak army might come down on them from the interior, the Henleinists blocked the roads leading from Eger to Asch.

Four large trees were felled across the main highway two miles from the city's edge.

Armed Sudeten labor corps boys guarded the barricades.

News of the Czechoslovak government's agreement yesterday to hand the Sudeten regions to Germany started a systematic execution of well-laid plans to police and rule the territory immediately.

In Eger, former Sudeten German party regional headquarters, Czechoslovak police still were nominally in charge early today.

But Vigilance Corps and War Veterans Associations patrolled the streets along with the police. Posters urging the people to remain calm were stuck up all over the city.

'Nothing Else Has Remained Because We Were Alone—'

By the Associated Press.

Prague, Sept. 21.—Following is the text of the communique in which the Czechoslovak government tonight announced its acceptance of the Anglo-French plan for meeting Reichsfuehrer Hitler's demands:

After 20 years of peace we were overtaken by a violent crisis. Dynamic political forces emanating from our neighboring states threatened our lands. We faced the necessity of meeting, with our own power, a much more powerful adversary which confronted us.

Even previously we had to depend upon their (our friends') help, but when we were threatened with force it became evident that the European crisis had become so serious that our friends advised us to purchase freedom and peace by sacrifices, inasmuch as they could not help us.

Two great powers told us with the full weight of their conviction and authority that only by territorial sacrifices on our part could security and peace be assured.

We wished to suggest a settlement of the dispute by arbitration, but the suggestion was rejected by others.

England and France, the two democracies, informed us that solution by arbitration could not solve the difficulty. It was their opinion that peace and freedom could not be established by such procedure. They informed us that they could not extend aid in the event we were attacked by Germany and they were of the opinion such a conflict would have been inevitable had Czechoslovakia refused to cede the territories of the German population.

Inasmuch as Russia was willing to come to our help only on condition that France come first and moreover only after the League of Nations should have determined that Czechoslovakia was attacked and that Germany was the aggressor, we found ourselves facing a threat of war, menacing not only the state, but associated nations as a whole.

The government is determined to maintain peace and order and independence under the new conditions which confront it. The President of the Republic and the government could do nothing but accept the suggestions of the two powers and the beginning of discussions for further negotiations. Nothing else has remained, because we were alone.

The government will lead the state further till we see hope that the National Assembly will not oppose appropriate alterations of the law which will be presented to it.

We will defend freedom, self-sufficiency and independence under the new conditions, strengthened by the love of all people who belong to our state.

At 5 p. m. (Minister) Krofta received the Ministers of France and England and presented to them the government's answer to the demarche which they had presented to the President of the Republic (Eduard Benes) at 2 a. m.

In its answer the Czechoslovak government initiated negotiations for a formal solution of the nationalities problem in the manner which the ministers proposed on September 19.

These proposals were intended to give the Czechoslovak people and its vital interests freedom of development, which will be guaranteed by international agreement.

We emphasize that this answer of our government to the proposals of the British and French governments will in no way alter the present legal standings of the state, and that our answer merely initiates negotiations for the regulation of this problem.

Farmers, workers, industrialists, employers and soldiers, all remain at your old posts and do your duty. Remember that you cannot do anything to your advantage by violence or demonstrations on the streets. By such action you would merely injure our state, which needs unity, endurance and strength to shield it against dangers.

Authorities everywhere continue in their usual duties. Laws and decrees remain valid. Courts and functionaries of the republic pursue their duties in the entire state.

Protection of citizens is assured. Do not permit yourselves to be moved to inconsiderate actions by agitators and provocateurs. Do not be depressed. Remain firm to your faith in the republic.

German citizens of our frontier territories have nothing to fear because of what the future has in store for them, or because of their private or national interests. They need not be concerned for their security.

Our state and administration remain responsible to the world for the protection of the interests and security of the whole population, Czech and German. This responsibility will be met, now as previously, by our authorities.

Anyone who would try to impede the settlement contemplated by the Great Powers would merely injure the interest of the German population.

Poland Demands Czech Silesia; 1,600,000 Troops Ready

Czechs Restive

By Walter Kerr.

Prague, Sept. 21.—An angered and bewildered Czech people demonstrated by the thousands on the streets of Prague tonight in what amounted to a mammoth wake, following the death of their country as an independent state. At 3:30 p. m. the government had given way to the British and French and agreed to cede the frontier areas to Germany.

The government's decision was reached at the end of a feverish day which began at 9 o'clock in the morning, when President Benes was routed out of bed and told by the two western democracies that the Czech-German dispute could not be settled by arbitration. Other cabinet members were called from their homes and conversations were begun which ended in capitulation. The only alternative was single-handed war with Germany, for the British and the French and the Russians had made it clear they would not fight.

This the cabinet explained tonight when it told its people what had happened.

After 20 years of peace, the communique said in part, "we were overtaken by a violent crisis. The dynamic political forces emanating from neighboring states threatened our land. We faced the necessity of meeting with our own power the much more powerful adversary which confronted us. Even previously we had to depend on the help of friends, but when we were threatened with force it became evident that the European crisis had become so serious that our friends advised us to purchase freedom and peace by sacrifices, inasmuch as they could not help us."

The government did not tell its people what those sacrifices were to be, although the people already know in a vague way that they involve the transfer of some Sudeten territory to Germany.

It did say it had suggested arbitration by the Permanent Court of International Justice, but that "England and France, the two democracies, informed us that solution by arbitration could not solve the difficulty."

This statement, and the fact that President Benes was awakened from his sleep last night and forced to call his cabinet together, indicated that some sort of ultimatum was being presented.

Legion Urges Big Defenses, No War Ballot

Wants Forces Enough to Keep Battles for U. S. Away From the Land

By the Associated Press.
Los Angeles, Calif., Sept. 21.—The American Legion today reiterated its demand for a larger Army, a Navy second to none, and expressed itself as unalterably opposed to a referendum on war.

"If an emergency threatening the territory of the United States arises," an adopted resolution said, "we want to be so prepared on sea and land that battles for defense be fought as far from the American shores as possible so that our civilians be not subjected to bombardments from foreigners."

The report of the national defense committee was the high light of the second business session of the twentieth annual convention of the Legion held today in Philadelphia Auditorium.

Chicago for 1939
Chicago was unanimously chosen for the 1939 convention.

The national defense committee's report recommended an increase from 12,760 commissioned and 165,000 enlisted Army personnel to 15,000 and 180,000 respectively. An enlisted Regular Army reserve of 150,000 as against the present 75,000 also was recommended as a C. M. T. C. with 50,000 youths training annually.

Improvement was asked for coastal defenses to insure protection of our coast and foreign possessions. Also sought were gradual accumulation in essential callings to meet the needs of approximately 1,000,000 men until production can supply reasonable needs and a National Guard of 210,000 enlisted men with proportionate officers.

Other demands for the Army included: Increased pay for enlisted personnel, construction of adequate barracks, concentration of training areas, establishment of a $400,000,000 war reserve to meet the needs of mobilizing 1,000,000 men, establishment of a $150,000,000 reserve to meet the needs of mobilization of the Army and National Guard, the mobilization of industry in time of war, and the completion of a contemplated highway to Alaska.

Seek Air Bases
For the Navy the Legion asked: Establishment of air bases on the Panama-Hawaiian-Alaskan line of defense and establishment of commercial air bases on Midway and Wake islands, and naval bases on some Pacific island to the south, establishment of adequate naval supply and repair bases convenient to areas of probable fleet operations in the western Pacific and Caribbean, rehabilitation of privately owned shipyards, particularly in the Pacific.

Also asked for the Navy were:
An adequate naval and Marine Corps Reserve with two weeks' active and 48 paid army drills annually; training ships to replace obsolete ships now being used on the Great Lakes; additional naval armaments.

Gov. Shepard Elected
Los Angeles, Sept. 21 (AP).—James O. Shepard, former Lieutenant Governor of South Carolina, was elected today to the post of Chief de Chemin de Fer de la Société des 40 Hommes et 8 Chevaux, the American Legion fun society. He succeeds Fred C. Fraser, of Washington, D. C.

Red Cross Helps Battle Traffic Toll

Highway First-Aid Stations Guard Roads Leading Into Capital

By Howard F. Wentworth.
As State and municipal forces continue their fight to prevent traffic accidents, the American Red Cross has joined the battle with a new mode of attack—to curb the tragic consequences of highway mishaps.

Engaged in the task of preventing crashes, authorities have had little chance to consider ways and means of saving the lives of accident victims. To this end, the Red Cross has established first aid stations along heavily traveled roads.

With trained personnel and equipped to render immediate first aid in the absence of medical assistance, 14 such stations have been installed on highways leading into Washington.

Not only are these stations plainly marked, but the simple highway signs serve also as a warning against carelessness and negligent driving. The marker reads only: "Emergency First Aid, American Red Cross"—but enough to make the average motorist pause and think.

Red Cross officials estimate that hundreds of lives can be saved if proper and immediate first aid is rendered at the scene of highway crashes.

The first aid units are located usually at gas stations or rural volunteer fire houses. At least two attendants are required to complete 20 hours of Red Cross first aid instruction.

The 14 in charge of the stations are cautioned against infringing on the realm of medical care. Their work deals with what to do and what not to do before the physician arrives.

On a national scale, there are 2,539 stations and 2,068 first-aid vehicles.

Red Cross first-aid stations in the Washington area are located as follows:

In Prince Georges County, Md., at Mount Rainier, Brentwood, Hyattsville, Riverdale, Bladensburg, Glenn Dale and Marlboro.

In Montgomery County, Md., at Bethesda, Silver Spring and Glen Echo.

In Arlington County, Va., at Jefferson, Wilson and Clarendon.

All stations are under the direction of each county chairman of the Red Cross.

The Junior Board of Commerce weekly luncheon today will be devoted to the Red Cross roll call, with a dramatic skit by civic theater players.

General Chairman Edgar Morris, of the roll call; Vice Chairman Earl A. Nash and Mrs. Frederick Warren, of the speakers committee, will be guests. Mrs. Warren, daughter of President Roosevelt, will be present as director of roll-call dramatic presentations.

Edgar Morris, jr., son of the roll-call chairman, and a member of the roll-call speakers' bureau, will address the luncheon.

Rep. Sanders to Leave Hospital in Few Days
Representative Morgan G. Sanders (Democrat), of Texas, was said last night to be "getting along fine" in Naval Hospital, where he is recovering from a fracture of the upper right arm. He was expected to be able to leave the hospital within a few days.

The 60-year-old legislator, who recently was defeated in the Texas primary after serving in the last nine Congresses, slipped Tuesday on wet leaves outside the House Office Building.

Westover, Air Corps Chief, Killed as Plane Crashes, Burns

Westover

They heard screams a few moments before the plane struck.

One of the first to reach the ship was Maj. C. L. Hurd, of the Army Air Corps, who was waiting at the air terminal for his chief to land.

Lieut. Col. Harvey S. Burwell, commander of the Nineteenth bombardment group, was named head of an Army board to investigate the crash. Inquiry was set for Monday, Gen. Westover was the second top-ranking commander of the National Air Forces to die in an air tragedy in less than six years.

Rear Admiral William A. Moffett, chief of the Naval Bureau of Aeronautics, plunged to death in the crash of the dirigible Akron off the New Jersey coast in 1933.

Sgt. Hynes was promoted to technical sergeant on September 17 and because of his "unusual ability," had been selected to pilot the Air Corps biplane on his various trips.

The pair recently returned from a flight to Panama.

Gen. Westover had left Los Angeles earlier in the day to participate in trophy presentation exercises at the Army's Western Air Force base near Riverside. He was returning to Los Angeles to re-enter legion convention activities.

As part of the convention ceremonies yesterday, Gen. Westover had directed a flight of 200 of the latest Army fighting planes in mass formation over the Los Angeles Coliseum.

Deep regret at the death of the general, a personal friend, was expressed last night by President Roosevelt.

The President immediately sent Mrs. Westover the following message:

"I am deeply distressed to learn of the sudden death of your distinguished husband. He was a gallant soldier—a true friend—one whose loss neither the Nation nor his friends can afford. That this death occurred in line of duty fails to soften the shock and all who knew him must suffer tonight because of his untimely death."

(Signed) "F. D. ROOSEVELT."

Characterizing the loss as "the greatest in the history of the Air Corps," Secretary of War Woodring said:

"His services and advice were always invaluable. He has been a splendid executive and administrator during the past few years in which we have been building up the Air Corps."

"I cannot pay too high a tribute to his contribution to the national defense. I valued his friendship and trustworthy counsel on all occasions."

Johnson Pays Tribute
Assistant Secretary of War Louis Johnson, who is attending the Legion convention, said:

"Gen. Westover, a distinguished soldier and gentleman, was one of the world's outstanding authorities on both heavier and lighter-than-air aviation."

"The Army Air Corps made great strides under his leadership and inspiration. He will be greatly missed."

Profound shock also was expressed by Gen. Malin Craig, Army Chief of Staff, who declared:

"The death of Maj. Gen. Westover is an irreplaceable loss to the Air Corps and to the Army as a whole. More than any other individual he has been responsible for the phenomenal progress of his branch in the Army of the United States."

Daniel J. Doherty, national commander of the American Legion, said "America has lost in the tragic death of Maj. Gen. Oscar Westover one of the greatest aeronautical experts of the day."

Gen. Westover was one of the most respected and beloved members of the service. When asked recently for his description of the "ideal man," a ranking Army officer said simply:

"Oscar Westover."

Held Many Ratings
The genial air chief held ratings as a heavier than air pilot, airplane observer, lighter than air pilot and balloon observer.

A native of West Bay, Mich., Gen. Westover joined the Third Battalion Engineers in New York City in 1901, and served for ten months as a private, being stationed for part of that period at the barracks here. He then won appointment to West Point and four years later was commissioned second lieutenant in the Infantry.

Twenty-five years later he had worked his way up to the rank of general.

He served on tours of duty in the Philippines and Alaska as well as at many posts in the United States up to the outbreak of the World War. During this period his accuracy with the rifle earned him the Distinguished Marksman's Medal and membership on the Infantry rifle team in the 1911 national rifle matches.

For his achievements as chief signal officer at the port of embarkation, Hoboken, N. J., and as chief of the storage and traffic division, Bureau of Aeronautical Production, Air Service, in Washington during the war, he was awarded the Distinguished Service Medal. He later became executive officer of the Air Service headquarters here.

While chief of the balloon and air division in 1921, Gen. Westover won the national fair balloon race, flying from Milwaukee to Lake St. John, Quebec, 865 miles in 16½ hours.

Later, representing the United States in the international Bennett balloon race, which started in Geneva, Switzerland, he flew over Hungary, Austria, and Czechoslovakia, and was awarded the "defying" Admiral Horthy's ban on foreign fliers.

He was appointed assistant chief of the Air Corps in 1932, and three years later became chief, with rank of major general.

When President Roosevelt gave the Army the task of flying the mail, Gen. Westover was assigned to the job of organizing and directing the service.

Gen. and Mrs. Westover had long been popular in Washington service circles. They lived at 3133 Connecticut avenue in Washington.

Gen. Westover leaves his wife, Mrs. Adelaide Westover; a son, Lieut. Charles B. Westover, and a daughter, Patricia, wife of Lieut. Wilhelm C. Westover, attached to Bolling Field. Services will be held at Arlington Cemetery. Arrangements will be made later.

Sgt. Hynes, 39, was born in Philadelphia. He enlisted in the field artillery in 1917 and has been in the air corps since 1920. He leaves his wife, Mrs. Uranium Hynes, and two sons, Donald L. and John C. Hynes. They live at Bolling Field.

Gen. Westover was succeeded automatically by the Assistant Air Corps chief, Gen. H. H. Arnold, until President Roosevelt appoints a permanent successor.

Doctors' Suit Illegal, Says Group Health

Physicians Not Qualified to Seek Injunction, 38-Page Brief Holds

Three Washington physicians yesterday were told, in effect, that activities of Group Health Association are none of their business as counsel for the G. H. A. entered a motion in District Court to dismiss the doctors' request for an injunction.

In a 38-page brief, E. K. Neumann and A. Blaine York, attorneys for the health association, said Drs. Sterling Ruffin, Prentiss Willson and E. W. Titus have no legal stake in the controversy, that the point they raised has already been decided in court and that, even if G. H. A. were violating the healing arts practice act, the only ones who could legally demand a restraining injunction are the District Commissioners, the board of licensure and the superintendent of police.

Doctors to Answer
William E. Leahy, representing the three prominent members of the District Medical Society, said last night that a statement supporting his clients' original arguments will be submitted to the court within five days, as prescribed.

Drs. Ruffin, Willson and Titus, the first two of whom are past presidents of the District Medical Society, filed suit for the restraining injunction against G. H. A. August 12, two weeks after the quasi-Federal clinic's legality had been upheld by Justice Jennings in the District court. The Bailey judgment, they said, "is erroneous without warrant of law and contrary to settled principles of law."

Jurisdiction Challenged
Neumann and York, in their motion to dismiss, argued:

That the court has no jurisdiction in the matter.

That the three physicians have no interest in the subject of their suit and have suffered no property loss due to activities of Group Health Association.

That the plaintiffs "are not proper parties and have no standing in equity as individuals or representatives of the class of medical practitioners to maintain this action."

That the District Code, Title 20 Section 152, lists parties who may petition the court to enjoin the unlawful practice of the "healing arts" and Drs. Willson, Titus and Ruffin are not mentioned among the eligibles.

That the injunction may be granted in advance of a conviction for violating the healing arts law, anyway, and that Justice Bailey's decision of last July "is a three doctors' action unnecessary."

Leahy and George P. Hoover are serving as counsel for the District Medical Society, as well as for the three physicians who are acting independently, in the feud with Group Health Association. Meanwhile plans are going forward at the Department of Justice for a grand jury investigation of the District Medical Society, scheduled to begin in October.

Md. Depositor Says $50,000 Is Missing From Bank Box

Charging that $50,000 in gold certificates was missing from his safe deposit box at the Takoma Park Bank, Leroy Abbott of Washington yesterday filed suit for $150,000 against the bank in Montgomery County circuit court, Rockville, Md.

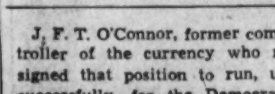

Abbott alleged he had rented a box August 17, 1938, and had placed $50,000 gold certificates and five $100 bills in it. On December 14, 1937, he charged, he discovered the funds were missing. The suit asserts the loss of the certificates was due to the negligence of the bank.

Takoma Park Bank recently was merged with Silver Spring National Bank into Suburban National Bank of Silver Spring.

J. F. T. O'Connor, Unsuccessful Candidate in California, Calls on Roosevelt

J. F. T. O'Connor, former controller of the currency who resigned that position to run, unsuccessfully, for the Democratic nomination for Governor in the August 30 primary, was a White House visitor yesterday.

He said he had discussed State politics with the President but declined to say whether his old post had been offered to him.

Though O'Connor resigned last January 20, no appointment to fill the vacancy has been made. There was some speculation at the time of the resignation that the position might be held open, pending the outcome of the primary.

New York, Sept. 21 (AP).—Tammany District Leader James J. Hines, facing retrial shortly on policy racket conspiracy charges, was elected a delegate to the Democratic State convention in yesterday's primary.

Although he was unopposed his followers turned in about 2,600 votes for him. Usually about 1,500 votes are cast.

A series of seven Republican Congressional campaign speeches will be broadcast nationally, beginning Saturday, G. O. P. headquarters here announced yesterday. The broadcasts will be over the Columbia Broadcasting System.

Senator Gerald P. Nye, of North Dakota, in the first address will discuss Democratic views on foreign relations under the heading "The United States and War."

Senator John G. Townsend, of Delaware, chairman of the senatorial campaign committee, and Representative Joseph W. Martin, of Massachusetts, chairman of the Congressional campaign committee, will participate in the series. Other broadcasts are to be made on September 30, October 8, October 14, and October 28 and November 5.

Senator Arthur H. Vandenberg, of Michigan, will make at least four speeches in the Congressional campaign, and former President Hoover plans three addresses.

Lebanon, Ind., Sept. 21 (AP).—Senator Milton E. (Democrat) Indiana, said last night the Supreme Court decision holding the first agricultural adjustment act unconstitutional was "conceded to be the worse political opinion that has been handed down since the Dred Scott case that led to the Civil War."

"The Government was beginning to apply for the farmer's profit the benefit of an indirect tax, just as the tariff benefits had been paid to the manufacturers," the Senator told a political gathering. The Supreme Court held it was constitutional to pay the manufacturers but unconstitutional to pay the farmers."

The case is not closed in charges of improper WPA political activity in the Kentucky primary election, Chairman Shepard of the Senate Campaign Expenditures Committee said yesterday. He was commenting on a general denial of the charges received from WPA Administrator Hopkins, who had written the committee that thorough investigation of 15 charges of undue support of Senator Alben W. Barkley in his re-election campaign had reduced them to only two, and in only one of those was even a reprimand held justified. Shepard said committee investigators still were at work in Kentucky.

$5,000 Fire Hits Fauquier Estate

Warrenton, Va., Sept. 21 (AP).—Mrs. H. Teller Archibald today placed an estimate of $5,000 on damage resulting from fire which partly destroyed the servants' quarters at her home, Archwood Manor, The Plains, Fauquier County.

The Warrenton Fire Department used water from the estate's swimming pool in a successful attempt to save part of the building and contents. Mrs. Archibald attributed the blaze to a hot-water heater.

Mrs. William O. Douglas, wife of the SEC chairman, and their children, William, 6, and Mildred, 8, were recovering last night from injuries received Monday in an accident near Halethorpe, Md.

Mrs. Douglas was bruised in the accident; William suffered a scalp wound, and Mildred was cut about the mouth and face. Their car was in collision with another on the Baltimore boulevard, en route to Washington from Cape Cod.

Meanwhile police at Halethorpe were asked to look for the children's dog—Colonel—black cocker spaniel with a white arrow on his forehead, who disappeared after the accident.

Chamberlain May Ask Hitler To Demobilize

Czech Swap Expected
New Guarantees Sought
Goal Is Disarmament

By the Associated Press.
London (Thursday), Sept. 22.—Informed quarters said Prime Minister Chamberlain will ask Reichsfuehrer Hitler to demobilize the large number of reserves assembled for maneuvers in return for annexation of the Sudetenland when he talks with the Fuehrer at Godesberg today.

With Czechoslovakia's surrender in his pocket as a bid for world peace, Chamberlain will ask Hitler to join an Anglo-Czechoslovak appeal for peace and order while an international commission drafts the new Czechoslovakia frontiers, it was reliably reported.

Other Proposals
Though this report was not confirmed, it was said in reliable quarters that Chamberlain's other proposals would include:
Co-operation in a new Locarno pact of nonaggression among Germany, Britain, France and Italy.
Termination of the hostile German press campaign.

New economic and military guarantees for Czechoslovakia.

Although it was said the prime minister probably would be satisfied now with demobilization of Germany's reserves, his goal probably would be general European disarmament and some agreement on limitation of air forces and the bombardment of unfortified civilian centers.

It was generally felt that only such a wide agreement would pacify the opposition to his deal over Czechoslovakia.

By Joseph Driscoll.
Special Cable to The Post.

London, Sept. 21.—Prime Minister Chamberlain will fly from Heston Airport at 10 a. m. tomorrow to present to Reichsfuehrer Hitler, at a hotel on the Rhine, the submission of Britain, France and Czech governments to Der Fuehrer's demands that Czechoslovakia be partitioned and its rich Sudeten German areas annexed to Germany.

Weather permitting, is the only qualification to Chamberlain's use of an airplane. The weather forecast for tomorrow is "unsettled."

Already there are signs that Hitler will not be satisfied with the acquisition of part of Bohemia for himself, but will insist that his potential allies, Poland and Hungary, likewise be given slices of Czechoslovakia.

This afternoon Poland served formal notice on the foreign office that it wants the Teschen district and the rest of Silesia, and Hungary put in a claim for all or part of Slovakia.

Chamberlain must hurry if there is any truth in the mounting rumors that Hitler has threatened to march into Czechoslovakia before midnight tomorrow if his full demands are not met.

Cologne, Then Godesberg
The prime minister will fly to Cologne and from there to Godesberg for his talk with Hitler.

The Hotel Dreesen, where the conversations will be held, is the point from which Hitler proceeded in June, 1934, to the purge of 100 Nazis, including Capt. Roehm and Gen. von Schleicher.

Accompanying the Prime Minister will be the two men who flew with him to Hitler at Berchtesgaden last Thursday—William Strang, the foreign office counselor, and Sir Horace Wilson, who is killed the "office boy of Downing street" but actually is one of the most important men behind the scenes in the British government.

Reinforcing these three will be Sir William Malkin, legal adviser to the foreign office, who will help draft any agreement reached, and G. P. Humphreys-Davies, private secretary to the Prime Minister.

The prime minister's plane will be trailed by a plane bearing Scotland Yard detectives and attack cases.

The second Hitler-Chamberlain talk over tea cups should begin shortly after 3 p. m.

Ultimatums or something closely resembling ultimatums were flying thick and fast over Europe today.

First in importance was Hitler's supposed ultimatum that he would march tomorrow, or anyway not later than October 1.

Then there was the joint ultimatum that Britain and France delivered in Prague. Paris called it "advice." Presented with the terms of the Anglo-French ultimatum to Hitler, Prague had stalled for time and suggested reference of the Sudeten dispute to the World Court at The Hague, but early today Britain and France jointly warned Prague that Hitler might march in a few hours and an unconditional assent was desired. Under this pressure, Prague gave the necessary assent which Chamberlain is to convey to Godesberg.

The French and Portuguese ambassadors also called at the foreign office during the day. Whitehall critics suggested that the French were asking permission to retain Alsace-Lorraine and the German minority therein, while the Portuguese were claiming a chunk of Moravia, having discovered two or three Portuguese there.

The Italian ambassador was still another visitor. Italy is backing up the German, Polish and Hungarian designs on Czechoslovakia.

Prime Minister Chamberlain is being attacked on the home front by a coalition of all parties which may yet bring down his government.

The attack was led today by Anthony Eden, the minister whom Chamberlain dropped as foreign secretary to conciliate Hitler and Mussolini. In a speech broadcast to America, Eden expressed deep anxiety as to the present trend of events, and said:

"The truth is that each recurrent crisis brings us nearer to war. We suffer ever closer to the abyss."

Text of Litvinoff's Geneva Address

By the Associated Press.
Geneva, Sept. 21.—Following is an abridged text of Soviet Foreign Commissar Litvinoff's address to the League of Nations Assembly today.

(Litvinoff began by attacking the League of Nations' lack of effectiveness for Ethiopia, Austria, China and Spain, then turned to Czechoslovakia.)

Now a fifth state, Czechoslovakia, is suffering interference in its internal affairs at the hands of a neighboring state and is publicly and loudly menaced with attack.

One of the oldest, most cultured and most hardworking of European peoples, one which acquired independence after centuries of oppression, today or tomorrow may decide to take up arms in defense of that independence.

Sure of Sympathy
I am sure the sympathies, if not of all governments, then at least of all peoples represented in the assembly, go out to the Czechoslovak people in its terrible hour of trial.

I am sure we all remember the most active part played by Czechoslovakia and President Beneš in the organization and development of the League.

I am sure that all our thoughts are so occupied with events in Czechoslovakia and around it that we delegates find it difficult to give necessary attention to the assembly's agenda, in which Czechoslovakia is not mentioned.

Bound to Czechoslovakia by a pact of mutual assistance, the Soviet Union abstains from any intervention in negotiation of the Czechoslovak government with Sudeten Germans, considering this to be the internal business of the Czechoslovak state.

We abstained from all advice to the Czechoslovak government, considering quite inadmissible that it should be asked to make concessions to Germans to the detriment of its interest as a state in order that we should be set free from the necessity of fulfilling our obligations under the treaty bearing our signature.

Neither did we offer any advice in a contrary direction.

We valued very highly the fact of the Czechoslovak government, from Paris where he interviewed French statesmen, issued a manifesto calling upon the nation to realize the magnitude of the "disaster into which we are being led."

Churchill, who said the Czechoslovakia under Anglo-French pressure amounts to "a complete surrender by the western democracies to the Nazi threat of force."

The British naval squadron at Istanbul suddenly curtailed its visit today and sailed into the Mediterranean. Scheduled stops at Rumanian and Bulgarian ports have been canceled.

In case it becomes necessary to evacuate victims of an air raid on London, emergency plans are ready for lodging 500,000 school children in hotels and private houses outside London. Owners of the houses and hotels will be paid weekly sums for feeding and sheltering the children. Empty buildings also will be commandeered for this purpose.

The ministry of health has distributed instructions to every hospital in the country about the evacuation of ordinary patients if necessary to provide room for air raid casualties.

It is easy to see that a real fear of immediate war was in Chamberlain's mind when he yielded to Hitler's program for the sacrifice of Czechoslovakia as a peace offering. One does not have to be clairvoyant to predict that when Parliament re-opens, Chamberlain's slogan will be, like Wilson's, "he kept us out of war," and on that line the Conservative Party whips are confident that if a general election were held before the end of this year, the Chamberlain government would sweep the country, being especially strong among the women.

Parliament is likely to refuse ratification of any British guarantee of the emasculated Czechoslovakia. The French persuaded Chamberlain to offer such a guarantee to Prague as an inducement to the Czechs to submit to Hitler. The submission was made today and if later on Parliament should overrule Chamberlain on the guarantee, Chamberlain will have an "easy out."

Hitler flatly threatened war when he saw Chamberlain at Berchtesgaden. Chamberlain came back in a firm manner, smiling grimly; not at all jittery; his mind made up. He knew that Hitler was ready to wage war however much he might be bluffing. He knew, too, that if the democracies bluffed in return, they would have to be 100 per cent ready to carry out their threat—and they were not.

The London-Paris axis is worried by the fact that its agents have traced 22 German infantry divisions on the Czech frontier, three mechanized divisions and hundreds of war planes. Add to this the fact that the Poles are holding immense war maneuvers near the Ukraine and that the Hungarian general staff chief was at Berchtesgaden yesterday. The sum is an ugly situation which goes beyond the Chamberlain-Daladier gift of Sudetenland and may involve a fairly complete vivisection of Czechoslovakia.

Some quarters it is believed Hitler is preparing a major operation upon Czechoslovakia which would leave Prague in about the same position in which Vienna found herself after the World War—an overgrown capital deprived of most of the surrounding territory which formerly supported it.

which did not even inquire of us whether we should fulfill our obligations under the pact since obviously it had no doubt of this and no grounds for doubt.

Reply to France
When, a few days before I left for Geneva, the French government for the first time inquired as to our attitude in the event of attack upon Czechoslovakia, I gave in the name of my government the following, perfectly clear reply:

"We intend to fulfill our engagements under our treaty with Czechoslovakia and together with France to give assistance to Czechoslovakia by means open to us."

"Our war department is ready immediately to participate in a conference with representatives of the French and Czechoslovak war departments in order to discuss measures appropriate to the moment."

"Independently of this we consider desirable that the question be raised at the League of Nations."

Allies Ignored Offer to Defend Czechs Jointly, Russia Says

Russia Proposed to Join Any Collective Defense of Czechs, He Asserts

By the Associated Press.
Geneva, Sept. 21.—Soviet Russia's spokesman before the League of Nations accused France and England today of ignoring a Russian offer to help defend Czechoslovakia and of granting "bonuses for saberrattling."

Foreign Commissar Maxim Litvinoff denounced the Anglo-French stand as dodging "a problematical war today in return for a certain and large-scale war tomorrow."

His speech had a double-edged effect: It revealed hitherto undisclosed steps leading to the British and French demands on Czechoslovakia to appease Reichsfuehrer Hitler, including Russia's offer of military support in any collective defense of Czechoslovakia.

It gave Czechoslovakia open support for an immediate appeal to the League under Article XII of the Covenant, which calls "any war or threat of war" a matter of concern to the whole League and says the League "shall take any action that may be deemed wise and effectual" to safeguard peace.

Neither the Czechoslovaks nor the Russians entertained much hope of effective League action.

Both, however, felt that an appeal might further excite world opinion, including the opinion of the French and British public, to such a point that the proposed satisfaction of Hitler at the territorial expense of Czechoslovakia could not be carried out.

"I am sure the sympathies, if not of all governments, then at any rate of all peoples represented in the assembly, go out to the Czechoslovak people in its terrible hour of trial," Litvinoff said.

He said the Anglo-French plan amounted to "satisfying the appetites of insatiable aggressors by the destruction and mutilation of sovereign states."

Russia May Turn East
Moscow, Sept. 21 (AP).—Dramatic revision of Soviet foreign policy—turning its back on Europe, its eyes on Asia—was foreseen tonight by some diplomats as a probable result of the successful Anglo-French pressure on Czechoslovakia to give Reichsfuehrer Hitler new territory.

Official observers believed Moscow's influence on western European states will have dwindled almost to the vanishing point when Czechoslovakia is "neutralized" by German encroachments.

The government newspaper Ivestia published a grim warning saying that "the fate of Czechoslovakia is the fate of France."

The New Alignment
Government sources have suggested in Soviet press articles that a German victory in Czechoslovakia automatically would mean Rumania and other Danubian states would adjust themselves to German hegemony and abandon all hope of support from France, their former protector.

Poland—already aligned with Germany in plans for gaining minorities at Czechoslovakia's expense—was considered by Moscow as definitely in the German camp.

Some quarters it is believed Hitler is preparing a major operation upon Czechoslovakia which would leave Prague in about the same position in which Vienna found herself after the World War—an overgrown capital deprived of most of the surrounding territory which formerly supported it.

Japan Says Planes Blast Rail Center

Shanghai, Sept. 21 (AP).—Japanese spokesmen reported tonight a fleet of warplanes supporting the extreme right wing of their Hankow offensive delivered a smashing blow at Sinyang, Peiping-Hankow railway town, 100 miles north of the Chinese capital.

The air raiders reported they destroyed scores of freight cars loaded with troops and munitions and machine-gunned Chinese troops throughout the Sinyang area.

Chinese and Japanese armies were engaged in a desperate struggle along the 100-mile Hankow line which straddles the Yangtze River southeast of Hankow and roughly parallels northern and southern railway approaches to Hankow.

Eyston Unharmed In Auto Race Crash
Bonneville Salt Flats, Utah, Sept. 21 (AP).—Narrowly averting disaster when the rear end of his seven-ton racer collapsed at a speed close to 300 miles per hour, Capt. George E. Eyston, of England, today brought the high-speed racing season to a close. Because the giant "Thunderbolt" was crippled beyond quick repair, the retired infantry captain ended his attempt, at least for this year, to raise his world's land speed record of 287.5 m.p.h. above the coveted 6-mile-a-minute mark.

Secret Police Fill Czech Border Area

Spy Fever Grips Both Sides of Boundary as Sudeten Raid Frontier

By Melvin K. Whiteleather, Associated Press Staff Correspondent.

Eger, Czechoslovakia (at the German frontier), Sept. 21.—The Czechoslovak border region where Sudeten German "Free Corps" troops conduct nightly raids on Czechoslovak frontier stations was filled with secret police tonight.

Spy fever struck both sides of the border. Twice today I found myself in police hands, once in Eger and once in Selb, Germany.

Two nights ago in Dresden, Germany, a Sudeten German denounced me as a spy when he saw me taking notes at a Sudeten mass meeting.

Dresden police searched me and finally decided to let me go.

Wear Civilian Clothes

At a Sudeten Free Corps encampment two miles inside Germany storm troops are drilling recruits. Almost every village has a Free Corps detachment. They can be seen marching along the roads or in the fields. Thus far they have worn only civilian clothes.

Their raids against border posts come at night. Six such raids were recorded last night. One was at Wildenau, on the road between Asch, Czechoslovakia, and Selb. Another was at Weiss, Czechoslovakia, where a Czechoslovak soldier was wounded in an attack on the customs house.

A Czechoslovak border patrol surprised the attackers when, apparently, they intended to storm the customs house from two sides. One of the attackers was believed wounded.

Grenades, Rifles Used

Three hand grenades and rifle fire damaged the Czechoslovak customs post at Wildenau, where German and Czechoslovak frontier stations are only yards apart.

Thus far, Czechoslovaks have said they were under strict orders to suffer the attacks without returning the fire whenever a bullet might go into German territory.

Sudeten German headquarters, which was moved from Selb to Bayreuth, said the Free Corps strength of 40,000 must be increased soon. Spokesmen for Konrad Henlein, Sudeten leader, reported that young Sudeten eager to enlist were standing in line at recruiting places.

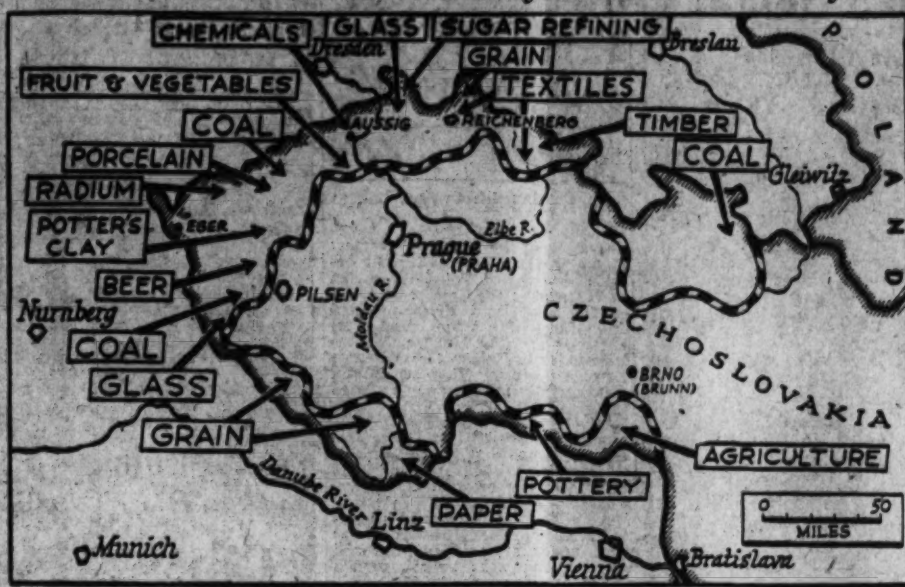

D.C. Man Arrested As Bet Taker

For allegedly taking numbers bets at a butcher's stand at New Center Market, Fifth and K streets northeast, Samuel Block, 37, 400 block H street northwest, was arrested yesterday.

He was seized by Sgt. George Deoye and members of the police vice squad, and booked on charges of operating a lottery and possessing lottery slips.

Arrested immediately before United States Commissioner Nathan E. Turnage, Block was held for the grand jury under $1,500 bail.

What Hitler Gains in Territory Ceded to Germany

Hitler Prepares for Entry Into Bohemia

Nazi Propagandists Turn Attention to Rumania

By Louis P. Lochner, Associated Press Staff Correspondent.

Berlin, Sept. 21.—So certain of victory in Czechoslovakia were Nazi Germans tonight that the problem of making Rumania, with her rich oil and wheat supplies, the next to ripen for a change was already occupying Nazi minds.

The Nazis sent truckloads of swastika flags rumbling eastward in preparation for a triumphal entry into Sudetenland which the Czechoslovak government agreed to cede Germany under strongest Anglo-French pressure—victory which Nazis had considered assured.

Triumphal Entry Expected

Other trucks poured in the same direction bearing troops in the same undisciplined destinations, apparently in readiness for the last act of the Czech drama.

The flags were for display by Sudeten when Reichsfuehrer Hitler triumphantly enters the Sudeten regions—as Nazis expect him to do—re-enacting his entry into Austria after annexation last March 13.

But this correspondent was informed, meanwhile, that in Nazi training schools for foreign propaganda Rumania now constitutes the central theme.

Once Rumania is in Germany's economic orbit, access to large oil supplies is assured to the Reich.

Unless all signs mislead, an intensified Nazi propaganda campaign will come soon in that Black Sea kingdom beyond the mountains east of Czechoslovakia.

Though Rumania would retain her political independence, realization of German plans to permeate her government with Nazi ideology and dovetail Rumanian economics with Germany's would bring a great step nearer completion of German ambition of "Drang nach Osten"—march to the east.

There was speculation in Berlin on how long Germany would continue to recognize President Benes' government in Prague.

Hitler at Munich

Hitler spent the day in his Munich apartment. He was expected to leave before long for Godesberg, in the Rhineland, where he is to meet Prime Minister Chamberlain, of Britain, to hear that the Czechoslovak government has agreed to Anglo-French terms.

Well informed sources here said there would be no haggling at Godesberg, with Hitler merely stating Germany's demands. Nazis considered cession of the Sudeten regions simply a foregone conclusion.

The official organ of the Nazi S. S. troops attributed Germany's victory to "better nerves" than her opponents.

"God is not only with the stronger battalions, he is also with those of better nerves," the publication declared.

"We have had better nerves, and will keep them. This decisive certainty is a weapon which Germany today places in the hands of its leader."

The newspaper Nachtausgabe asserted Germany was certain "Czechoslovakia's hours are numbered."

Along German frontier regions facing Czechoslovakia were 40,000 members of the Sudeten free corps, organized to fight for union of their homeland districts with Germany. At their backs, not far away, stood Germany's armed might, waiting command from the Nazi Fuehrer.

Educator Asserts New Dealers 'Rob the Unborn'

Hamilton, N. Y., Sept. 21 (AP)—Dr. George Barton Cutten, president of Colgate University, criticized today the fiscal policy of President Roosevelt's Administration, called it "robbing the unborn" and warned that a continuation would bring national financial chaos.

Speaking at a college opening convocation, he said:

"Under the guise of emergency, relief, pump priming, timing, the suppressed third or any other convenient or catchy phrase, specially manufactured for the occasion, billions of money which the Administration did not have, has been borrowed and passed out as a loving anaesthetic to preclude any possibility of thinking among the masses."

Pleading for a balanced Federal budget and "old fashioned thrift," Dr. Cutten asserted:

"The whole spending program has been a dismal failure economically, industrially and commercially. It has been more successful politically than in any other way."

Pole and Hungarian Demands Complicate Hitler's Plans

Allies Say He's Promised Them Aid More Czech Partitions Believed Banned Can't Let Down Chamberlain or Friends

By Ralph W. Barnes, Special Cable to The Post.

Godesberg, Germany, Sept. 21.—Reichsfuehrer Hitler is scheduled to arrive here tomorrow morning to receive at the hands of British Prime Minister Chamberlain, spokesman for the western democracies, the "gift" of a good slice of Czechoslovakia.

The gift was forced almost literally at the point of the bayonet, in that the new supreme war lord's prolonged game of saber-rattling and his implied threat to invade the Sudeten territory had pushed Europe to the verge of a general war.

To prevent such a conflict, Britain and France "sold out" Czechoslovakia, the state which was the handwork and once the pride of the democracies. A note of triumph is evident in the Nazi press tonight.

Hitler in Dilemma

According to present plans the second conference of Hitler and Chamberlain—the first was held at Berchtesgaden last Thursday—will begin at 3 p. m. tomorrow, at the Hotel Dresden, situated on the banks of the Rhine here.

It was Bismarck, Hitler's great predecessor as German empire builder, who once said, "he who controls Bohemia (the western portion of Czechoslovakia) holds the key to Europe." Barring unforeseen developments, Hitler is not only to control, but to occupy an ample portion of what was once known as Bohemia. Bismarck's remark may have little real meaning today, but in any case, this man who is termed "greater than Bismarck" seems now to hold the key to Europe.

Though he appears tonight to be on the eve of annexing to greater Germany the predominantly German areas of Czechoslovakia, Hitler may be in something of a dilemma when he sits down tomorrow with Chamberlain at the green-topped table in the conference room.

Allies Cite Promise

Hungary and Poland are scrambling to get in on the Czechoslovak spoils. Following the conference of Premier Imredi and Foreign Minister Kanya, of Hungary, with Hitler at Berchtesgaden yesterday, Imredi issued a statement in Budapest today in which he said that the Fuehrer agreed to support "with all the means of his disposal" the claims of Hungary to the Magyar districts of Czechoslovakia.

Likewise, Josef Lipski, Polish Ambassador to Berlin, saw Hitler yesterday, and today Warsaw seemed convinced the Fuehrer will press the Polish demands for the relatively small portion of Czechoslovak territory in which a predominant share of the population is Polish.

Can't Let Down Allies

Information from Budapest and Warsaw here tonight. Since Premier Mussolini's speech in Trieste, in which he called for plebiscites for all minorities in Czechoslovakia, Hitler, it is said, could not afford to let down the Hungarians and the Poles. If he should, Hungary and Poland would be seriously irritated; Budapest would swing too far towards the Rome end of the Rome-Berlin axis, and Warsaw might swing too far outside the Berlin orbit.

Czechoslovakia, apparently, has accepted the London-Paris plan on conditions of an "iron-clad guarantee" of her territory, other than that which is to be handed over to Germany—whatever autonomous or cantonal arrangements might be provided for the remaining minorities.

Hitler to participate with London and Paris in such a guarantee, what will Hitler do?

One report has it that Hitler must, and will refuse to provide such a guarantee, but such a step might embroil him seriously with Chamberlain, a development which he will desire to avoid if possible.

London undoubtedly understands the new complications, but it is difficult to see how these problems can be worked out without prolonged negotiations.

"No Precipitous Action"

Despite denials, persistent reports continue that Hitler is determined to have his troops in the Sudeten areas assigned to him by next week. Official denials of this take the form of statements that "no precipitous action is intended" pending the outcome of the Hitler-Chamberlain talk.

Probably accompanied by Foreign Minister Von Ribbentrop, Dr. Goebbels and Heinrich Himmler, head of the S. S. and the secret police, as well as by other aides, Hitler will arrive by special train from Munich at 10 a. m. tomorrow morning.

With his entourage, Chamberlain is expected in his special plane at the Cologne Airport shortly after noon. He will continue to Godesberg by automobile. Hitler will stop at his permanent suite at the Hotel Dresden, one long narrow room of which is to be used for the conference.

Chamberlain and his entourage are to be quartered at the Hotel Petersburg, situated high on one of the famous seven hills of Godesberg. Since the Dresden and Petersburg are on opposite banks of the Rhine, Chamberlain must take a 20-minute automobile ride and ferry across the Rhine every time he comes to see Hitler. Not only Godesberg, but Bonn and Cologne are gayly decorated with union jacks and swastika banners on the eve tonight of the conference.

Loyal Spain Promises to Expel Aliens

Negrin Gives Pledge to Take Even Naturalized Soldiers Out of War

By the Associated Press.

Geneva, Sept. 21.—The Spanish government pledged itself unconditionally today to withdraw all foreign volunteers on its side in the Spanish civil war.

Premier Negrin made the announcement before the League of Nations Assembly, which he asked to send an international committee to Spain to verify that the understanding was carried out.

Dr. Negrin told the Assembly the withdrawal would include not only all foreigners but also those who had become Spanish nationals since the civil war began in July, 1936.

Plan Proposed in July
The premier declared, "the government of Spain is anxious to show its determination to remove all pretext of placing blame on her for failure to obtain an end to foreign intervention in Spain."

(The International Committee for Non-Intervention in Spain, with headquarters in London, agreed July 5 on a plan for evacuation of foreign volunteers from both sides in the Spanish civil war.)

(The Spanish government, in accepting the plan, estimated 10,000 foreigners were on its side and 100,000 with the insurgents. The insurgent regime on August 22 replied with an acceptance subject to so many conditions that London considered they had in effect killed the plan.)

France Bravery

Negrin paid tribute to the valor of the International Brigade fighting with the government troops and then submitted a resolution calling for the appointment of the committee he suggested be sent to Spain. He made it clear to the Assembly there were no strings attached to the government's decision—that it was not subject to a withdrawal of any kind from the insurgent side nor did it require any action of the League.

"Government Spain has no need of provoking a general European war to solve its own problems," the premier said.

"If you bring the nonintervention policy to an end, the Spanish people themselves will decide the fate of Spain and we have no fears for the outcome."

Life-or-Death Operation Faces Bethesda Girl, 4

Baltimore, Sept. 21 (AP).—Four-year-old Nancy Jean Kurrie entered Johns Hopkins Hospital today for an operation which may cause her death, but without which physicians declare she cannot live. Hugging her doll, the fair-haired, smiling child was brought here this afternoon by her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Sebastian Kurrie, of Bethesda, who were injured in the automobile crash which brought critical injury to Nancy. The Kurrie automobile was struck while en route to the Gettysburg celebration last July by a driver who was charged with driving while drunk and reckless driving.

"Physicians said Nancy may be operated upon tomorrow by a kidney specialist."

"Mrs. Kurrie, who still limps because of the accident, said: 'We have experienced death in the greatest degree and a thousand times since this thing happened. But thank God she's still with us.'"

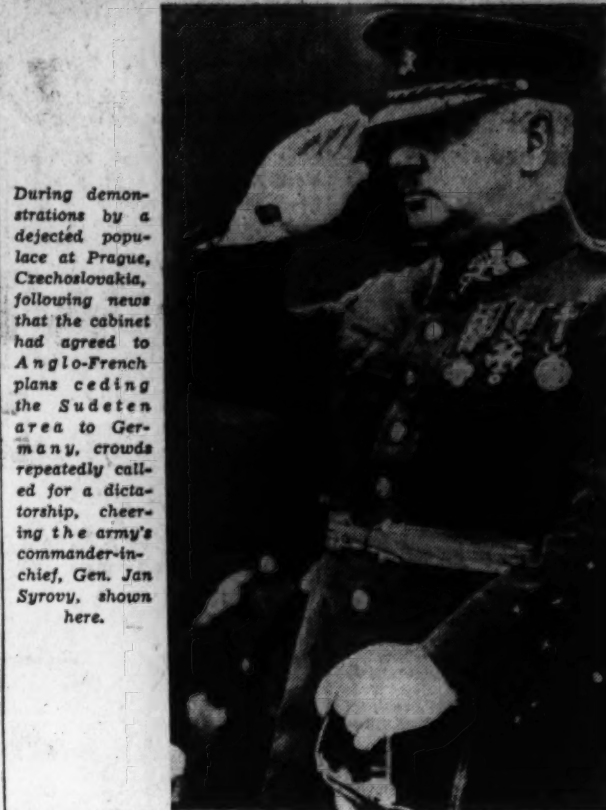

Investment Stocks Given Low Grade

The Securities Commission reported to Congress yesterday that common stocks of certain investment concerns fared worse on the market than did general common stocks.

"The commission," the report said, "examined the price fluctuations of the issues of seven of the larger investment-holding companies with issues on exchanges for the period from 1929 to 1937 and concluded that the market price experience of all of these common stocks, except that of one company which specialized in the oil industry, was worse than that of general common stock prices."

It said that the American public had invested about $7,200,000,000 in all investment trusts up to the end of 1937.

Czech Army Chief Cheered at Prague

Five Reported In Revolt in Paris Cabinet

Bloc Meets Alone Resignation Plan Seen Daladier Faces Storm

Paris, Sept. 21.—Threats of a cabinet crisis over the French-British pact in the Czechoslovakian situation were today forced to the fore by the resignation of Premier Daladier.

Five ministers, headed by Paul Reynaud, minister of justice, who is known to favor a sterner stand against German expansion in central Europe, held a midnight meeting in the justice ministry.

Those meeting with him were Cesar Campinchi, navy minister; Georges Mandel, minister of colonies; Jean Zay, minister of education; and Marc Rucart, minister of public health.

Resignation Plans Seen
This extraordinary development aroused reports in chamber lobbies that the ministers were considering offering their resignations in protest against Foreign Minister Bonnet's handling of the crisis.

The ministers declined to comment, but their action in meeting apart was taken to mean in political quarters that they were at odds with their colleagues.

Even if Daladier weathered a threatened breakdown in his own cabinet, his Peoples Front support giving him a parliamentary majority was sharply split on the issue. A group of Socialist Deputies voted a motion declaring its opposition to "diplomatic action which results in imposing on a state a sacrifice of its independence without consulting it and under the menace of aggression."

Protest Gatherings
A storm of protest was gathering among French allies abroad and the French public at home.

Premier Daladier averted a Socialist and Communist move to convoke Parliament in extraordinary session to review his course.

Foreign Minister Bonnet conferred with British Ambassador Sir Eric Phipps tonight and the French envoy to Britain, Charles Corbin, was instructed to see British Foreign Secretary Halifax in London.

These negotiations were intended to put the French and British views in final accord for Prime Minister Chamberlain when he sees Hitler again tomorrow.

Czech Crowds Shout for War And Dictator

turn with a definite time limit had been delivered to the government. It was assumed the alternative to immediate acceptance was immediate invasion by the German army.

No mention was made today about the Hungarian and Polish minorities, but it is taken for granted that they will be given either full autonomy or annexation to their native lands.

There was only one possible joker in the Czech acceptance today. Acceptance must be ratified by the National Assembly, and the way the people were demonstrating tonight indicated there would have to be a radical change in public opinion before the Parliament would convene.

The cabinet was "fired" with the hope that the National Assembly will not oppose the appropriate alterations of the law which will be presented to it.

Its appeal for peace and quiet was only heeded to the extent that it may have prevented the demonstrations from turning into rioting. "Do not be depressed," the government, "remain firm to your faith in the republic."

It warned the Sudeten Germans not to start trouble when they heard the news.

The demonstrations in Prague began about 5 o'clock in the afternoon, but already during the morning uneasy thousands had stood before the government buildings and the home of Premier Hodza. They knew nothing definitely of the situation, but they felt something was wrong.

At 5 o'clock 2,000 shouting men and women marched into the Václavské náměstí, the city's main square. They did not know their country's fate had been settled an hour and a half before. They came to urge their leaders to stand fast. Police tried to disperse them but the crowd broke through and continued its march.

Call for Dictator
In the next block 3,000 more were gathering. Passersby cheered them on and men and women waved and yelled from office windows. "Long live the army!" the crowds screamed, "and long live Gen. Krejčí!"

The noise grew louder and louder. "We have the war," and "We want a military dictatorship!" were heard. Police reserves were called out and tried to keep the crowds moving, but the demonstrators stood firm. They waved Czech flags and banners and sang the national anthem.

An hour later they moved on, but then the news began to leak out. Men gathered in groups of 50 and 100 at every street corner. They screamed at one another and shook their fists. Many burst into tears.

The crowds grew larger and larger and were formed. "The cry went up 'Down with Bonnet' and 'Down with Hodza'." The marchers turned toward the government castle and palaces. Police tried to break them up, but they kept marching, and soon there were columns of tramping men and women of from 2,000 to 7,000.

More police were called out and hundreds of mounted men. They tried to block the bridges, but some columns got across. At the gates of the president's palace were swung shut, and the guards put on steel helmets. Mounted men were stationed to block every road leading up the hill.

'On to the Castle'
As fast as the columns were broken up, more were formed. At 8 o'clock 3,000 crossed the famous old Charles Bridge and filed into the Malostranské náměstí, a large square, with a statue of the late President Masaryk in the center. They tried to push their way into the Nerudova, an avenue which leads to the castle, but 40 mounted patrolmen barred the way. Behind them stood 60 other police.

The police captain called on them to turn back, but the mob yelled, "Let us by." "The police should be with us."

For one minute there was a stalemate. Then into the square marched another column of 4,000. The crowd, now 7,000, went almost mad. "Out of the way," they yelled. "On to the castle!"

Beauty Expelled

The mounted men sat quietly in their saddles and each one tried to persuade the marchers to leave. There was a push from behind and the mob swelled forward. A horse went down. A man in the crowd fired a blank cartridge. Another horse went down and the crowd pressed through the gap. But the police plugged it and halted the rush without using their weapons.

There was a stalemate again. Meanwhile, three columns of men had crossed the Manesuv Bridge and were heading for the rear of the castle. They sang as they marched. "Down with Bonnet" and "Throw him over the castle wall."

Police stopped them before they got too far.

Police Join Singing
These episodes were repeated throughout the early part of the night. Most of the time the marchers were orderly and police handled them gently. Many times the police joined them in singing the national anthem.

Late tonight thousands of men and women were walking steadily through the streets of the main square in pilgrimage toward the statue of King Wenceslas, who ruled over Czechoslovakia a thousand years ago.

The danger in all this appeared tonight to be considerable. Most of the demonstrators did not know quite what it was all about. They knew the government had given way to Germany, but they did not know how much. Only vague reports of the Anglo-German-French demands have been published here.

It is feared in the days to come when they do hear exactly what capitulation to Germany means, riots may break out which will be difficult to control. And back to their homes may be coming about that time the thousands of young men who have been mobilized into the army in the last few days.

Contracts Signed For D. C. Center

An early start on the Municipal Center project was promised as the District Commissioners signed contracts accepting a $5,700,000 loan and grant from the Public Works Administration.

Under the terms of the contract, the District will repay $3,135,000 of the total to the Government in installments on June 30 in each of the years 1941 to 1945, plus 4 per cent interest. The remainder, $2,565,000, is a grant.

Work will begin before January 1. The project must be completed by June 30, 1940.

The project is to build a new center for the District of Columbia, including a new city hall, a new police headquarters, and a new fire department headquarters.

Poles Demand Czech Silesia; Army Poised

Poland

Crowds in the streets of Warsaw and other Polish cities tonight demanded a united Polish-Hungarian march against the Czechs.

(The Associated Press reported from London that the Polish Ambassador today had presented to British Foreign Secretary Viscount Halifax statements that their nations wished to share in the Czechoslovak spoils. Informing British sources, the dispatch said, agreed that Hitler was certain to confront Prime Minister Chamberlain with these claims when they meet tomorrow at Godesberg. —Editor's note.)

A Polish military class which was to have been released yesterday was held under arms indefinitely and more troops were rushed to the Czech border.

A foreign office spokesman said the government reserved "complete freedom of action" for safeguarding Polish national interests in regard to Teschen.

The town of Teschen, straddling the border, has been the scene of recent minority disorders. The League of Pilsudski's Legionnaires issued a manifesto tonight saying:

"Enough words have been spoken, now deeds must follow."

The Polish Marksmen's League, with 500,000 members, wired the army high command offering to march into the Teschen area and reclaim it forcibly for Poland.

The office of Marshal Edward Rydz-Smigly was flooded with demands for armed action, mostly from organizations.

Poland held the Teschen area for two years, from 1918 to 1920, and complains that it was attached to Czechoslovakia "behind Poland's back" while Polish troops were fighting off the Bolsheviks on the east.

President Moscicki hurried to the foreign office during the evening and conferred with Foreign Minister Beck, who informed him of the situation.

Hungary Puts in Thumb
Budapest, Sept. 21 (AP).—A spokesman of the Hungarian foreign office said tonight Hungary accepted Czechoslovakia's capitulation communication only as "a plan for settlement" of Czechoslovakia's minority problem.

Hungary cannot accept the Prague announcement, he said, as a final solution of the Czechoslovak minorities issue. Prague mentioned only the Sudeten German regions which it decided to cede to Germany. Hungary is concerned with territory in Czechoslovakia, contiguous to Hungary, in which 700,000 Magyars live.

Hungarians of all political faiths jammed Heroes Square tonight in a giant torch-lit demonstration demanding the Magyar regions of Czechoslovakia. There were mass demonstrations throughout the capital which brought almost half of Budapest's population into the streets.

The demonstrations ended at 10 p. m. with demands that the government give them an immediate order to march into Czechoslovakia if Hungarian territorial demands are not met.

In addition, the Hungarian Nazis, who took part in great numbers in the demonstrations, asked through their leaders that the government of Premier Imredy resign, that their leader, Maj. Salassy, who is jail, be released, and that an authoritarian

Nazi government be established "to meet the demand of the hour."

Tonight's throng pledged itself not to rest until the territories given to Czechoslovakia at the end of the World War were returned to Hungary.

dows which had been shattered by the wind.

At Riverdale, R. I., a 55-year-old woman was killed when a chimney fell on the car in which she was seated.

Another person, believed to be a woman also, drowned in several feet of water in the very center of the downtown district.

The storm, in Providence, was described as the worst since the great flood of 1815.

Massachusetts State Police reported 23 persons missing in the Cape Cod town of Fairhaven, and said they were checking unconfirmed reports three persons had been killed in Easton, one in Mansfield, and two in Swansea, Mass.

In Newport, R. I., the death list was reported as at least eight. Walter Cremin, 55, of Newport, was drowned when a wharf building in which he had sought safety was swept into the water.

At Newport Beach only one building was left standing on the waterfront out of 30 structures. Two men and two women in an automobile were believed to have drowned.

Falmouth, Mass., was flooded to a depth of 3 feet in places.

15 Fishermen Missing

Coast Guards listed three fishermen as drowned, lost when their boat capsized off Nahant, Mass. A fourth was rescued.

Seven men were missing after a tugboat capsized in Boston Harbor. A passing boat rescued another.

Members of the Eastern Point fishing fleet reported 15 fishermen missing on three boats.

Physicians performed many operations and delivered three babies under candle and lamp light in Somerville (Mass.) hospitals when power failed.

Westhampton Beach, which has a summer population of about 3,000 residents, protrudes from the south shore of Long Island and is connected to the mainland by a row of sand dunes. The point became isolated when the dunes were flooded.

Commander Wolfe said only 6 of the 75 or 100 homes were visible, indicating some might have been swept away. The marooned residents were reported huddled on Dunes road, the main thoroughfare.

Westhampton is about 90 miles east of New York City.

In Fall River, Mass., warehouses and railroad box cars floated on the crest of the tide, driven in by the fury of the onshore gale.

At Bristol, R. I., raging waters swept 1,000 feet or more inland, driving hundreds from their homes.

At Fall River, where a falling chimney injured 20 earlier in the day and wind-furled a church, a tidal wave wrecked numerous automobiles and was still rising about 7:30 p. m., Eastern standard time.

Approximately 1,500 persons were made homeless in Warren, R. I.

The New England Telephone & Telegraph Co. reported a serious fire raging in Peterboro, N. H., one of the most seriously flood-stricken sections. All roads leading to it were submerged and impassable.

At least six persons were taken to hospitals in Brockton, Mass., where wind destroyed property unofficially estimated at nearly $1,000,000 in value.

The collapse of 700-foot freight shed on the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad in New Haven seriously injured one workman.

Seven persons were rescued from swirling waters as a reservoir dam burst at Gardiner, Mass.

In New Hampshire, Hillsboro, Bradford and Henniker were isolated as rain-laden streams poured down the White Mountains. Residents of several sections of Concord, New Hampshire, capital, were warned to vacate their homes as the Merrimack River rose rapidly.

150 Families Evacuated

In western Massachusetts, Pittsfield reported all highways blocked. Families in East Lee were ordered from their homes.

Rutland, Vt., reported 10 feet of water in the street in the eastern part of the city. One hundred fifty families were evacuated from the low-lying areas. Every road out of the city was blocked.

All of Rutland was under water. Four persons, their identity not immediately available, were reported drowned at Newport, R. I., where the fashionable Bailey's Beach was a shambles.

In Springfield, Mass., authorities reported 24 persons seriously injured.

Mayor R. L. Putnam ordered evacuation of a south end section of Springfield inhabited by 2,500 persons.

The Providence waterfront was shaken when a gas tank, containing 300,000 cubic feet of gas, exploded and burst into flames.

At Gloucester, Mass., pleasure craft valued at $75,000 were wrecked.

A radiogram from the Nashua, N. H., Telegraph said fire apparatus had been sent over Temple Mountain to help fight a blaze in Peterboro, N. H., where the buildings of a grain company and the Transcript Publishing Co. were destroyed by flames.

Two students were killed and 20 injured when a chimney toppled on a building at a girls' school in Northfield, Mass. The dead were identified as Audrey Lucas, Yonkers, N. Y., and Norma Stockburger, of Meriden, Conn.

Flood Isolates Town

Albany, Sept. 21 (U.P.)—Flood waters swept over the lower Hudson River Valley tonight isolating the town of Windham and marooning approximately 800 persons.

State police were rushed to the area. The town was submerged under five feet of water. Several buildings collapsed.

night to keep in touch with the disaster.

All Coast Guard planes in the stricken region will take off at dawn today to help in relief operations. Visibility was improving last night as the storm began to subside in New England.

Three Coast Guardsmen of the cutter General Green were believed drowned at Woods Hole, Mass., while aiding storm victims. They were: Machinist Frederick T. Lilla, Motor Machinist's Mate Heyward T. Webster, and Radioman Third Class John A. Stedman.

Both Woods Hole and Falmouth were inundated and inhabitants were reported to have sought safety on housetops. In Providence, R. I., the railroad station was damaged.

At Ocean City, Md., a small Coast Guard picket boat answered the call of the Fisher Holoka, with the master and three men on board. They were safely brought to port through dangerous waters.

2 Fishermen in Tie

Hagertown, Sept. 21—Two Washington County fishermen are tied for honors for catching the largest bass in Washington County streams this season. A 4-pound, 9-ounce small-mouth bass caught yesterday by Fred Holden, a Hagertown policeman, in the Potomac River, equaled in weight one landed by Harry Bowman, Williamsport, last July 5.

White Mice Given Credit for Aiding Cancer Studies

If the mysteries surrounding the cause and cure of cancer are ever solved, the white mouse will be eligible for much of the credit due, according to a scientific report published yesterday by the Public Health Service.

Written by Dr. H. B. Andervont, senior biologist attached to the bureau's cancer laboratories at Harvard University, the study describes the reactions of eight strains of experimental mice to injections of cancer-inducing chemicals.

It was found that some strains were suitable for studies relating to spontaneous breast tumors while others were adaptable for research on spontaneous lung cancer. All of the eight strains were found to have outstanding characteristics conducive to tumor growth.

Storm Lashing East Coast Same As Periled Florida

The storm which took a heavy toll of life yesterday in New England and New York is the same hurricane which, threatened to strike Florida Tuesday but later curved out to sea, according to Weather Bureau observers.

Centered about 75 miles east of Cape Hatteras yesterday morning, the storm moved almost directly northward at the rate of 50 miles an hour and it was centered over Vermont at 7:30 p. m. with pressure below 29 inches over an area 200 miles in diameter. Lowest pressure was 28.74 inches at Burlington. Heaviest rainfall was in Atlantic City, where 5.9 inches was recorded in 24 hours. Boston reported a wind of 88 miles an hour. Only the edge of the storm touched Washington.

Sonja Henie Now Executes Ballet Dances on Skates

'My Lucky Star' Reveals New Technique of Olympic Champion; Boothe Play for N. Y.; New Vehicle Chosen for Gertrude Lawrence; Notes

SONJA HENIE now steps up into the ranks of those artistic innovators who borrow from other fields to perfect their own particular talents. That is to say, the blonde and buoyant Scandinavian has turned to the school of classic ballet dancing as a source of new figures and new rhythms that may be adapted to the extraordinary repertoire of skating miracles she has heretofore revealed as high priestess of speed and grace on blades.

Those who attended yesterday afternoon's preview of "My Lucky Star," the latest Henie screen vehicle, to be presented, beginning tomorrow, as chief film feature of the eleventh anniversary bill at Loew's Capitol Theater, did so in the unvoiced expectation of watching a repetition of the same old pirouetting, spinning and arctic acrobatics they had seen the avelle Sonja execute faultlessly so many times before. They did see a good deal of that, to be sure, but in addition they witnessed a solo skating number in the strictly ballet manner and a gliding spectacle of "Alice in Wonderland" that established a new top for this amazing young woman's supremacy as the undisputed wizard of the rinks.

Miss Henie, it seems, had no more exhausted her resourcefulness in earlier pictures than Paul Draper and Fred Astaire had theirs at the moment when they adapted the technique of the ballet to the apparently incompatible forms of the tap dance. It will be interesting to observe what this athletic and attractive youngster will think of to do next, without breaking her neck.

It is a slightly bizarre story that has been devised to serve as the peg upon which to hang Miss Henie's individual proficiencies in "My Lucky Star" and it doesn't fit together any too snugly, quite obviously because the gentlemen in the Twentieth Century-Fox cutting-room got in too much of a hurry. Because it eventually takes on the tinge of college capers on a fictitious campus, the introduction of some nice tunes by Gordon and Revel is made easily possible and such singing and dancing pranks as Joan Davis and Buddy Ebsen get a chance to show their wares. The supporting cast is as fat with notable names as the star's feats on skates are full of physical risks. By and large, "My Lucky Star" is pretty pretentious entertainment—different, even if not wholly bullet-proof.

So confident are Brock Pemberton, producer, and Clare Boothe, author, that they "have something" in "Kiss the Boys Goodbye," playing its first week on any stage at the National Theater, that they plan to take it directly into the Henry Miller Theater in New York, following the Washington engagement.

The piece had been so accelerated by the time of Tuesday night's performance that a full quarter-hour was lopped off the final curtain hour. The audience, like the opening night's, was kept in a continuous uproar by Miss Boothe's biting lines and risqué implications. They seem to have been made to order for Broadway.

Having heard of the brightly promise of the new occupant of the theater which he controls in New York, Gilbert Miller was in the audience at the National Tuesday night and had a very tough time trying to keep his face straight—if he was trying. Also present was "Jock" Whitney, who probably had heard that the character of "Top" Rumson in the play was at least vaguely etched after his likeness, although there are those who insist that it must be Tommy Hitchcock who was meant—if anybody actually really was.

At any rate, a pleasant time seemed to be had by all. Now we'll listen for the verdict of the Manhattan "death watch."

A late announcement which flew in by airmail from as far away as the West Coast is to the effect that John Golden has obtained a new play by Lenore Coffee, "The Birds Stop Singing," which he has scheduled as the next vehicle for Gertrude Lawrence, now on tour in "Susan and God," given its premiere in the Capitol a year ago, when Osmond Perkins died suddenly after the first performance and Paul McGrath succeeded to his part.

It was Mr. Golden's first intention to try out "The Birds Stop Singing" at some special matinee performances in the Baltimore Theater, Los Angeles, but "time was wastin'" and the experimental performances now will not be given until the company reaches the Harris Theater in Chicago, October 16. If the new play proves the hit expected, it will be withdrawn until after Miss Lawrence has appeared in "Susan and God" in London. So now you know.

Perhaps the boys were right about this being the "movies' greatest year." "Marie Antoinette," at the Palace, goes into a third week tomorrow; down the street at the Columbia, "Alexander's Ragtime Band" enters the second week of its repeat engagement, making four in all downtown; the Warners have some "sleepers" in the near off and there are many proved hits on many local shelves waiting for "repeat dates" to carry on the successes of their first runs.

On top of all that encouragement in the local field, along comes the trade press announcing that the first month of the "Motion Pictures Are Your Best Entertainment" campaign shows a national box-office bulge of 10 percent.

Nice going, I. W. I. A. S.

Manager Leonard McLaughlin of the Maryland Theater, in Baltimore, reports brisk ticket sales for "Window Shopping," the Louis E. Sheeter-Norman Clark comedy of department store life, that will open in the Monumental City next Monday night, preliminary to its Broadway premiere on October 10. George Sidney, famous on both stage and screen, is the star of the company now rehearsing in New York. Norman Clark, co-author, is a Baltimore drama critic well known in this city, both in and out of the theater.

Barrymore Traps Black Spiders

His brother, John, has hunted Kodiak bear in Alaska and jaguars in South America, but Lionel Barrymore recently engaged in a hunt which thrilled him fully as much as any of John's exploits. He begged nine Black Widow spiders, and their parchment-like egg cocoons, at Lake Arrowhead. "Black spiders," he says, "fascinate me. They remind me of the part I played in 'The Jest' on the stage."

In Hollywood

With Hedda Hopper

Hollywood, Calif., Sept. 21.—It's right that Shirley Temple should head the American Legion parade in the Coliseum tonight—just as she does at the box office.

When I went over to 20th Century Fox to see her, Shirley was sitting for portraitist, surrounded by cameramen, Mary Lou, her stand-in, her teacher and her mother.

First shots were taken in a choir boy's robe against a stained glass window—real glass. Last year it was paper. Shirley picked up a hymn book and said "This is Greek—I can't sing this."

"No, it's Latin," her mother replied. Shirley started singing in pig Latin, or so it seemed to me. When they asked her to strike a Holy Night look, she said "My goodness, this is art."

She just didn't feel holy and wanted to play. There was a Christmas tree she'd like to have finished—trimming. Then Mrs. Temple said, "Darling, say 'Ah' and look up, as you did at the Planetarium in Chicago."

And those are the holy pictures you'll see soon on every magazine stand in the world.

The cameraman told me Shirley was just as good at her first sitting as she is today. They take between 200 and 300 negatives. Her longest one demanded 27 changes of costume. For her 15 moving pictures Shirley posed for 5,000 still portraits, 80 percent of them good. From those 2,000,000 prints have been made. How's that for a 9-year-old?

The Temples loved their first real trip across the country. They kept no schedule and didn't know when they'd arrive, so nothing was arranged for them. Not until they reached Washington, D. C., did any embarrassing thing occur. That was when a woman offered Shirley a cigarette.

Mrs. Temple said "For the first time during an interview I held my breath, but Shirley just looked at the doll in her arms and said, 'Marcia has no bad habits.'"

I'm certain the success of Shirley comes from her sensible parents. They treat her as you do yours. Shirley hates pretense and knows at once if you're on the level. Mrs. Temple is just a small town housewife who hasn't changed a lick—and is not the least bit awed because the most famous person in the world belongs to her.

The Temples were delighted when Mr. Morgenthau took them through the Treasury Building. They didn't know till later that it was the first time he had ever conducted personally. Afterward he insisted upon their going home to dinner with him.

When they visited J. Edgar Hoover, he was wearing one of Shirley's badges. He pinned one on her saying, "I'll make you a G-woman."

"But I'm a policewoman," said Shirley. The first stage play Shirley ever saw was "I Married an Angel." She went back stage afterwards to see Zorina. She was so fascinated by the wings Zorina had worn, which were hanging on the wall, that she tried them on. But they were too big for her.

All the presents she received on the trip were shipped home. They're still arriving. From Boston came a first grade primer over 100 years old from a perfect stranger. Another was an enormous box with a dozen presents, each to be opened on days designated on the wrapper. The first one was a photograph of sender, a dear old lady, saying, "I thought you might like to know what I look like." The date for the second one hasn't come around yet.

ORSON WELLES lives at Sneden's Landing, at Palisades, N. Y. His mail, however, always is delayed, because the postal officials first deliver it, by mistake, to Palisades Park. The mail then is forwarded to Welles at Palisades. . . . Orson became annoyed at this delay last week and wrote a letter of complaint to the United States Postoffice. "Surely," he stated, "you must employ men who know the difference between Palisades, N. Y., and Palisades Park, N. J. . . . Three days later the postal official replied: 'Our men do know the difference between Palisades, N. Y., and Palisades Park, N. J. . . . That letter, by mistake, went to Palisades Park.' . . .

JAMES MELTON, the radio singer, will become an opera star this week. He'll appear in "Madame Butterfly" for the San Carlo Opera Co. . . . Sidney Solomon's new Central Park Casino, at 181 E. 57, will open October 7, with Fanchon's band, the De Marcos and his old Casino crew of waiters. . . . The book now being completed by Martha Dodd, daughter of former Ambassador Dodd, has been accepted by Britain's Left-Book-of-the-Month-Club. . . .

AFTER A HIT PREVIEW, Jack Warner invited Director Mike Curtis to the Clover Club. "All I want is a sandwich," Curtis pleaded. . . . "We'll celebrate," Warner promised, "so I'll buy you one there." . . . Warner immediately went to the gambling table. After an hour Curtis tugged his pants and reminded him about the sandwich. Warner, who was winning heavily, gave him $1,000, explaining: "Play a while. I'll be with you soon." . . .

The director lost, waited another hour and then tugged Warner's sleeve again. . . . His host, who was still winning, gave him another thousand. Curtis lost, departed and had his sandwich at a coffee stand. . . . The next day he received a note and blank check from Jack Warner. "Anybody who can afford to drop $2,000 at the Clover Club," it read, "can afford to donate $500 to the Red Cross." . . . And so Curtis paid $500—for a sandwich he never got. . . .

ROBERT KATCHER, the Viennese author of "When Day Is Done," just was notified that he'll receive no further royalties in connection with his music. . . . William K. Howard's "Hometown" again has had a change-of-title, this time to "Picket Fence." . . . Left Erickson, who arrived with his wife, Frances Farmer, was screen-tested yesterday for the movie, "one-third-of-a-nation." . . . Thornton Wilder, who just made his acting debut in his own play, "Our Town," spent the week end at a New Haven hospital, where his sister, Isabel, now is a patient. . . .

HARRY TUGEND, the movie producer, has found himself somewhat confused in the maze of international politics. . . . "All I know is this," he proclaimed, "I'm neither a Rightist nor a Leftist." . . . "And what'll you do when the revolution comes?" he was asked. . . . "They'll stand me against a cellophane wall," the middle-of-the-roader replied, "so that both sides can shoot me." . . .

JED HARRIS is completing arrangements with Burgess Meredith to star him in the forthcoming Harris movie production of "Young Man With a Horn." . . . Heywood Brown, who was invited to address the C. I. O. convention here as a representative of the white-collar group, showed up wearing a red shirt. . . . Charles Laughton's newly imported film, "13th Street," was quietly shipped back to England for dialogue revision. Its cockney was unintelligible for local consumption. . . .

PETER LEWIS, young son of Sinclair Lewis and Dorothy Thompson, confessed to his parents that he had written a play about a Vermont farmer who, torn between Vermont and the lures of the Big City, chooses Manhattan. . . . One of the rooms of the Lewis home in Vermont was converted into a stage and Peter—together with a cast of neighborhood youngsters—prepared to perform. . . . The opening line was: "Gosh, but I hate Vermont." . . . The opening was postponed for five minutes, because of a newly arrived guest—the Governor of Vermont. . . .

Payne's Gun Skill Increases His Fans

The most unusual chapter of the John Payne Fan Club is located in the heart of Los Angeles. Payne, a crack shot, spends many evenings target-practicing at one of the shooting galleries on Los Angeles' Main Street. Several girls fans recently recognized the tall, dark-haired young fellow who was knocking over tin rabbits so consistently. The girls inveigled their small brothers into collecting the empty cartridge shells from Payne's gun. They use the spent shells as membership badges for their Fan Club, and for bracelets.

Loew's Capitol Will Celebrate A Birthday

'My Lucky Star,' Starring Sonja Henie, Tops Bill; Other New Stage and Screen Programs

Loew's Capitol Theater will present a specially assembled birthday bill for the week beginning Friday in celebration of the eleventh anniversary of the opening of the famous F street playhouse. The major screen feature will be "My Lucky Star," starring Sonja Henie, supported by Richard Greene, George Easther, Joan Davis, Arthur Treacher, Cesar Romero, Louise Rainer, Paul Hurst and a large number of others. The stage portion of the program will include Stan Kavanagh, Antipodean juggler; Barr and Estes, Starnes and Anavan, the Singing Commodores and the 34 Chester Hays Capitol Dancers. A special feature will be conducted by Phil Lampkin.

"Four Daughters," Warner Brothers' production of Fannie Hurst's novel "Slater Act," will open on the screen at the Earle Theater tomorrow, with Claude Rains, May Robson, Lola Rosemary and Prescilla Lane. Also on the bill will be "The Sign of the Cross," with Hugh, John Garfield, Jeffrey Lynn, Dick Foran and Frank McHugh in the principal roles. The story is an engrossing one of American home life. The stage bill will be headlined by two notable "personal appearances." Wayne Morris, popular young screen star, and Johnny Davis, former bandman and now a film comedian, will share top billing. Others on the bill will include Paul LaVerre & Co. Mario and Florida, dancers, and the 18 Dancing Roxiettes.

A return engagement of the sensational popular stage comedy, "You Can't Take It With You," by George S. Kaufman and Moss Hart, who won the Pulitzer Prize with it, is announced for next week at the National Theater. A specially recruited cast will be seen in this visit of the play. A bargain scale of admissions will be in effect for this engagement, night prices ranging from 50 cents to $1.50; matinees, 30 cents to $1. There will be the usual afternoon performances on Wednesday and Saturday.

The eagerly awaited screen version of the stage hit, "Room Service," opens today at RKO-Keith's Theater, with the Marx Brothers starred. Lucille Ball, Ann Miller and Frank Albertson lead the supporting cast. The comedy is "played straight" by the Marx Brothers, in contrast to their usual method of "gagging up" their vehicles. Wait Whiner's "The Whaler" will be an important supplementary.

"Secrets of An Actress," latest vehicle from the Warner Brothers Studios for Kay Francis, will be the chief feature of the screen bill opening tomorrow at the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Theater. The supporting cast is led by Ian Hunter, Gloria Dickson, Isabel Jeans and Penny Singleton. Usual auxiliaries will complete the entertainment.

Tomorrow the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer production of "Marie Antoinette," starring Norma Shearer, in the title role, will join that small coterie of select pictures that have played three consecutive weeks at Loew's Palace Theater. This magnificent spectacle of France at the time of the French Revolution will continue for a third notable week. The supporting cast includes such luminaries as Robert Morley, John Barrymore, Joseph Schildkraut, Tyrone Power, Gladys George and hundreds more.

Tyrone Power, Alice, Faye and Don Ameche will continue for a second week of the repeat F street run of "Alexander's Ragtime Band," at Loew's Columbia Theater, beginning tomorrow. This will complete a solid month of the picture on F street. In this "cavalade of music," the best of Irving Berlin's songs during the past 25 years are reviewed in embellishments of an interesting romantic comedy-drama. A new installment of "Dick Tracy Returns" will be on the program.

At the Little Theater next week, beginning Sunday, the major screen attraction will be "Amphitryon 37," a French film version of the play

Theater Opening at Greenbelt

Large crowds were on hand last night for the formal opening of the new co-operative cinema theater at nearby Greenbelt, Md.

Paderewski Lends Dignity To Belasco's Initial Bill

The incomparable music of Paderewski and the impeccable manners of Marie Tempest raise "Moonlight Sonata," the Belasco's opening attraction of the season, from a slow-moving, hackneyed film to a picture of uncommon dignity.

The opening half-hour is its finest, with a concert hall scene of the Polish pianist playing the Chopin Polonaise in A Flat Major, Liszt's Second Hungarian Rhapsody, No. 2, and the Beethoven Sonata of the title. The camera shows us the miraculous fingers of the 78-year-old patriot-musician from an over-the-shoulder angle which, otherwise, would fall to few of us common folk. While the piano has that clouded mechanical effect, which, alas, all films, so far, seem doomed to reproduce, those shots of a perfect keyboard technique are both the inspiration and backbone of the picture.

The film, English made, concerns the landing of a plane on a Swedish island estate whose Baroness, Marie Tempest, is delighted to find herself hostess to so noted a figure as Paderewski. Her granddaughter, 18 and inexperienced, is attracted by another occupant of the plane, a suave, mysterious man of the world. How her simple unaffected lover and the wise Baroness save her from this adventure constitute the film's plot.

Such a story demands the most delicate of strokes. Unfortunately, the villain is so blackly painted that he becomes almost ludicrous. Had the girl's youthful confusion and inexperience been more subtly set forth, the story would have held its proportion.

Paderewski speaks quietly, moves deliberately and altogether performs with that naturalness befitting a man engaged in the act of playing himself.

Miss Tempest, England's beloved star of 50 seasons, gives the film its genuinely credible dignity and charm. Hers is a genuine genius for playing ladies of the grand manner both gracefully and not deserving of a wack on the pate.

Charles Farrell (Remember "Seventh Heaven") is the faithful Eric. His looks and acting, convincing though they may be, are defeated by his peculiarly stringy voice. Barbara Greene is the girl and Eric Portman, the villain. Lawrence Hanley supplies some dry British humor, as Paderewski's companion, and Miss Tempest's late husband, Graham Browne, appears as her partner in a children's hospital venture.

Lothar Mendes directed with a too halting pace adding that traditionally annoying habit from Hollywood of poking the camera into listening scenes where, somehow, out of the camera's eye you may be sure, Paderewski plays Chopin. If a movie audience insists on seeing how his fellow bipeds react to an artist's work, Mr. Mendes let him move his own neck if he must, but let the camera stay put. E. M. Delafield, whose Provincial Lady books show her to be more than blessed with humor, is one of the perpetrators of some of that dialogue.

A Mickey Mouse comedy, an underwater color short of "Silent Fighting Fish"—and a newsreel complete a bill whose unique virtues are the glorious Paderewski and the charmingly witty Miss Tempest.

upon which the recent Alfred Lunt-Lynn Fontanne comedy of "The Gods at Play" was based. Henri Garat and Jean Boitel play the leading roles, with Armand Bernard, Odette Florelle and Marguerite Moreno in support.

The latest issue of "Screen Snapshots," "The Hermit Kingdom," in color, "Flying Feathers" and Disney's cartoon of "Polar Trappers" will comprise the featured short subjects on next week's bill at the Trans-Lux Theater, beginning tomorrow. The program, as usual, will be based on newsreel coverage of the world.

combined vote in the two primaries to be repeated in November. O'Connor received more votes in the two-party elections than Fay and Dulles combined.

There were others who considered that he might give up the Republican nomination, in order not to mar his record of party loyalty, resign himself to two years out of Congress and perhaps run again in 1940.

Whatever course he follows, however, the Administration has succeeded in ending his ability to seriously impede New Deal legislation for the next two years. Even should O'Connor defeat Fay in the general election he would return to Congress as a "cub" Republican, with no committee chairmanships.

Seabath, dean of the House with 22 years of service, dating from the "Teddy" Roosevelt days, has had a typical "land of opportunity" career. His family, parents, six boys and five girls, came to America from the present Czechoslovakia in 1881. Adolph worked in a sash-and-door factory, became a clerk, entered real estate business, and, while selling lots went to university and law school.

Seabath House Dean

He was appointed a justice of the peace and later police magistrate, then was elected to congress and has been back continuously, to a man engaged in the act of playing himself.

However, other Democrats who have fought some New Deal proposals will still be on the committee, including E. E. Cox, of Georgia; Martin Dies, Texas, and Howard W. Smith, Virginia. With the four Republicans, they remain in a position to cause the New Deal occasional worries.

On the whole, Congressional incumbents fared well in seeking re-nomination in New York, Massachusetts, New Jersey and Wisconsin in Tuesday's primaries.

Results of the balloting, as tabulated from Associated Press and other dispatches received here were as follows:

Seven of the eight Democratic House members from New York City won re-nomination, O'Connor being the only exception. Walter E. Pierce, Plattsburgh attorney, won the Thirty-first District G. O. P. nomination to succeed Minority Leader Bertrand H. Snell, who has retired. Representative James M. Mead, mentioned for the Democratic gubernatorial nomination, won re-nomination in the Forty-second District, Buffalo, and Representatives Bert Lord, Walter G.

Andrews and John Taber won over Townsend candidates in Republican primaries.

Wisconsin

Gov. Philip La Follette won Progressive re-nomination, while Robert K. Henry, coalition candidate, won the Democratic nomination over Jerome F. Fox, New Dealer, but lost the Republican race to Julius P. Heil, Senator F. Ryan Duffy, unopposed in the Democratic primary, will meet Lieut. Gov. Herman Ekern, Progressive, and Alexander Wiley, Republican, in November.

All of the ten incumbent Representatives in Congress, seven Progressives and three Democrats, were re-nominated, except Raymond J. Cannon (Democrat).

Former Gov. James M. Curley (Democrat), and former State House Speaker Leverett Saltonstall won the gubernatorial nominations. The 15 members of the State's congressional delegation all were re-nominated, while Representative Thomas A. Flaherty was assured of reelection, no Democrat having entered against him.

William H. J. Ely, without opposition, and former Senator W. Warren Barbour were named by the Democrats and Republicans, respectively, to run for the Senate. Seven Republican and six Democratic members of Congress won re-nomination. Mrs. Madeleine Edison Sloane, daughter of the late Thomas A. Edison, lost to Albert L. Vreeland, of East Orange, in her race for the Republican nomination in the Eleventh District. Vincent Clausen and Frank C. Osmer, Jr., were named by Democrats and Republicans, respectively, for the seat formerly held by the late Edward A. Kenney (Democrat).

Report Urges 'Tax Exempts' Be Prohibited

20th Century Fund Body Says Federal Debt Has Been Exaggerated

By the Associated Press.

New York, Sept. 21.—Tax-exempt securities should be prohibited in the future, in the opinion of a Twentieth Century Fund committee which studied the subject and made public its report tonight.

The Twentieth Century Fund is an organization endowed by the late Edward A. Filene, Boston merchant, to study social and economic problems.

Its committee on debt adjustment, which made the study, was headed by J. Lionberger Davis, chairman of the board of the Security National Bank Savings & Trust Co. of St. Louis. The research was done by technical experts under the supervision of Dr. Albert Gallor Hart of the University of Chicago.

The report said State and local governments had reduced their indebtedness since 1933, and the net Federal debt was not so large as some have asserted.

Tax exemption of Federal, State and local government securities, the report said, "makes it unhealthily easy for government bodies to go into debt," and makes "debt investments too attractive to wealthy people who can best afford to run the risk of direct ownership in stocks, real estate and other equities."

Presidential Dialectics

President Roosevelt has some reason to feel aggrieved because certain newspapers intimated that his advocacy of two bridges for Maryland, financed in part by the PWA, had a close connection with his efforts to defeat Senator Tydings in the primaries. As he indicates, the bridge projects were under discussion long before the Tydings-Lewis contest was dreamed of and had been strongly endorsed by Maryland road authorities.

Moreover, the President was simply following a time-honored, though far from praiseworthy political technique in picturing the benefits of the possible bridge projects to local residents whose good will he sought. However, there is a sharp contrast between the warmth with which he insisted on September 4 that a bridge should be constructed across the Potomac—"just as fast as we can possibly do it"—and the cool detachment with which he stated on September 20 that the bridge probably would not materialize because of financing obstacles.

It is easier, however, to understand the President's enthusiastic endorsement of bridges that may never be built than to grasp the distinction he draws between declarations of principle and practical politics in defending his decision to take no part in elections involving opposing political parties. From a Chief Executive who constantly emphasizes the importance of ideals in the formulation of legislative programs, it is decidedly confusing to hear it said that professions of principle afford no guide to practical politics. At least that is the only logical interpretation to be put on his statement that he was talking principles rather than practical politics when he announced recently that he would not object to the election of a liberal Republican if the choice lay between such a candidate and a conservative Democrat.

If that declaration meant anything at all, it implied that the President would be willing to work for the election of Republican liberals and the defeat of reactionary Democrats—according to his own classification of these terms. But it now appears that the Administration "purge" stopped with the primary contests. Possibly the outcome of these preliminary bouts with the conservatives in his own party was responsible for the President's strange views about the slight practical importance of declarations of principle.

To the man or woman, however, who regards principles as a safe guide to conduct, it is disturbing to have the President suggest that a gulf yawns between declarations of principle and everyday political practices. Most people prefer to cling to a few illusions, however unrealistic they may be. And they particularly dislike to have them shattered by those occupying high office. It would have been much less upsetting, therefore, if the President had frankly confessed that he had changed his mind about proceeding from primary purges to election purges. He need not have stated the reasons for this change of policy. They can be easily guessed.

Another Rail Parley

The President's appointment of a committee of six representing management and labor to formulate a plan for relief of the railroad is apparently not intended to afford a solution of the crisis produced by proposed wage cuts.

To stave off a strike in case the unions should vote to resist announced wage reductions, the President is preparing to follow the familiar procedure of delay laid down by the railway labor act. His first step in case of a strike vote would be to appoint a fact-finding board to gather information concerning the proposal and report its findings within a period of 30 days. Thereafter, another delay of 30 days would be decreed by law before either the carriers or their employees could take any action affecting the status quo.

With the roads insisting that wage rates must be cut and the unions adamant in opposition to such a proposal, it is evident that the committee of six is beginning its deliberations in an atmosphere inimical to compromise of the current wage controversy. However, as the President points out, the wage problem is only one of many issues that have to be considered in devising a satisfactory and comprehensive solution of our transportation problem.

Even if the committee fails to formulate a constructive plan for meeting the existing crisis over wages, the President has nevertheless been wise in bringing together representatives of management and labor after they had agreed to disagree. By virtually compelling the members of the new committee to discuss questions of mutual concern he has laid the foundation for a better understanding that should result in more intelligent legislative action in the future.

The difficulties that confront the railroads have been thoroughly aired in official reports and unofficial discussions. Last spring, the President appointed a special committee to make recommendations for relief of the roads. But Congress adjourned without taking any action. It does not seem at all likely that the latest committee will be able to suggest a comprehensive solution for the many complicated problems of the railway industry. But there is a strong possibility that a frank interchange of views and information by representatives of management and labor may make it easier for Congress to secure support for a legislative program dealing vigorously and directly with railroad problems. We should no longer tolerate mere palliatives that may temporarily stave off more bankruptcies without removing the basic difficulties that confront the roads.

Hitler's Latest Triumph

Those who have read Mein Kampf carefully are well aware of the intuitive brilliance of Hitler's foreign policy. It has throughout been as astute as that of the pre-war German Empire was fumbling and shortsighted. And the unbroken series of triumphs which the Fuehrer can exhibit to his people has been in no small degree assisted by his critics.

It is greatly to be feared that this assistance is today again operating in Hitler's favor. The form which it takes currently is denunciation of the French and British governments, particularly by Americans who never had any intention of fighting for the Czechs, over the allied betrayal of Prague. All this must be sweet music to Hitler's ears. Divide and rule has been his motto since he founded the National Socialist Party. It is so much graven when those who oppose his philosophy do the dividing for him.

In 1924, when Hitler occupied his days in jail by the writing of Mein Kampf, his country was degraded, weak and friendless. With the keenest political insight the imprisoned leader of an abortive revolt saw, and outlined, the course by which Germany could become an omnipotent nation. Her former enemies must be set against each other, he wrote. And German policy must skillfully capitalize on these differences and weave its way through the gaps in a disunited front.

Nothing is to be gained by discounting the amazing success of that policy. Indeed Hitler's best friends are those who have disliked him so that they have refused to admit either his extraordinary skill or the validity of his tremendous popularity in Germany. The impression has been created that the whole Nazi movement is a hollow shell, ready to collapse at a single resolute push. Five years ago that might have been true. It is far from the case today.

Step by step, with consummate technical ability, the Nazi government has constructed an amazingly self-contained economy and has simultaneously broken to splinters the wall of enemies which once ringed it about. Italy and Japan have become allies of the Reich; Nationalist Spain is a virtual colony; Poland and the Baltic are German satellites; all Central Europe, with the collapse of Czechoslovakia, becomes her sphere of influence. Almost imperceptibly, in the midst of idle predictions of revolt or economic collapse in Germany, this work has gone steadily forward. How often the Fuehrer must have blessed those enemies whose hatred blinded them both to his abilities and his power.

In the meantime the democratic front has become steadily weaker. France, rent with internal dissensions and beset by increasingly serious economic problems, has little of the strength of pre-war days. Great Britain, effectively flouted by Italy, no longer conceals her tremendous loss of prestige. Russia, for all the bold words of her spokesmen, could not be regarded as a reliable military asset even if her brand of dictatorship made the Communist state a welcome ally. Belgium, Holland, Scandinavia and the Balkans have shown clearly that they will not join a war against German aggression. And the United States, as is our habit, is much more eager to give advice than aid.

The collapse of the jerrybuilt resistance to Germany is therefore not surprising. There is certainly nothing laudable in the way France has deserted an ally, nor in England's agreement to a sacrifice by others which neither her bungling diplomacy nor her diminishing influence was able to forestall. The whole development is tragic and poignant in the extreme. But to attribute it wholly to Anglo-French pusillanimity is to admit a total ignorance of the way the tides have long been setting.

What stands out now is the great and growing strength of Germany, defined by her complete destruction of the Treaty of Versailles. And with the reduction of this treaty to ruins every remaining settlement of 1919 becomes subject to the German will. If Czechoslovakia has no legal or moral right to its constituted territory, then the same applies to Poland, to Rumania, to Yugoslavia and to the Baltic States. Their charters to their present frontiers are no more valid than is that of Czechoslovakia.

On the will of one man—Adolf Hitler—depends continuation of what is left of the post-war structure of Europe. And his will, as frequently and freely expressed, is that all this structure must be swept away to make room for a mighty German empire. The rise of such an empire, bitterly hostile to the democratic tradition, committed to Hitler's doctrine that "strength alone constitutes the right to possess," is far from being a matter of indifference to the New World.

It would have been a gracious action had France and Great Britain agreed to stop Germany in our behalf. Unquestionably we would have cheered their effort from the sidelines, and sold them supplies at wartime rates. But the French and British have not seen it this way. And the anguished squeals which their capitulation elicits here is psychologically important. It indicates a widespread recognition that our own interests are jeopardized by Hitler's latest triumph.

That feeling, in the months ahead, is likely to become clarified and positive. The time is coming when the United States, perforce, will substitute realism for emotion in its approach to world affairs.

Mr. O'Connor Is Purged

The defeat of Representative John J. O'Connor for the Democratic renomination in the Sixteenth Congressional District of New York is sootting salve for the wounds suffered by President Roosevelt in the purge campaign.

The victory of James H. Fay, whose candidacy the President openly espoused, ends Mr. Roosevelt's hitherto unbroken succession of defeats in Democratic primaries in which he had personally intervened. And the ironical circumstance that Mr. O'Connor wins the Republican nomination makes the President's triumph more complete. For the latter development gives some substance to Mr. Roosevelt's contention that the purge was primarily designed to assist those who desire to be Republicans to become such.

Mr. Dulles, the defeated candidate for the Republican nomination, is not only a Republican of long standing and a man of high character and great ability; he is also a man who in the true sense of the word can only be characterized as a liberal. He was turned down by the members of his party for the cast-off candidate of the opposition, not because of any personal deficiencies but only because his rival, Mr. O'Connor, has won the disapproval of the President.

No doubt the Republican majority of the Sixteenth Congressional District believed that in voting for Mr. O'Connor as against Mr. Dulles they were putting "nation above party." But in emphasizing the negative character of Republican strategy at this time, and their dependence on dissident elements within the Democratic ranks for men to serve as their standard bearers, they rendered a disservice both to the nation and to their party.

So far as the President's objective is concerned, it now makes precious little difference whether Mr. O'Connor is defeated or elected in November. If he is defeated it will mean the subtraction of one Congressman critical of certain aspects of the New Deal and the addition of one more inclined to follow the President's lead. If Mr. O'Connor is elected, however, it will be as a Republican. As such he is scarcely likely to continue in the chairmanship of the House Rules Committee. And it was primarily because of his actions in that capacity that Mr. O'Connor's elimination was desired by the White House.

Life Begins At 76

The conventional view that youth is the time of adventure and old age the period of repose is due for sharp revision—if the example of Paul F. Travers, of Mamaroneck, N. Y., becomes contagious.

Mr. Travers is an artist and 76. Before he became an artist he was a building contractor; before that a gold prospector in Alaska. That glamorous episode ended more than 30 years ago. Since then Mr. Travers has lived quietly in the New York suburb, building houses, painting pictures and recalling old times.

But, as the saying goes, "boys will be boys." Apparently the weight of years did not, in Mr. Travers' case, destroy the urge for adventure, and having held himself in leash for so long he has decided to have one more fling. For others life may begin at 40; for him, at 76. Leaving his home without announcement, he has set off for Mexico—to make a new start.

Some will call his venture foolhardy. But certainly there is magnificent logic behind it. No age is too old to begin a new chapter in the book of life. Even if Mr. Travers is brought back to Mamaroneck, as he will be if the watchful police can find and persuade him, he will have added one more adventure to those worn thin in memory. Life renews itself for those who do not stand still.

This seems to be a banner crop year, with one exception. The seeds of Republican hopes, sown from time to time, haven't even sprouted.

The European Crisis

'Mortal Compulsion'

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I think it was Dorothy Thompson who observed that something ought to be done about the herd of columnists who speak with equal authority upon every subject under the sun. This has become distressingly manifest during the current European crisis. The journalistic stockyards are stamped with self-appointed experts on foreign affairs.

The various fantastic interpretations with which they seek to account for the troubles of the Old World indicate their tendency to reason with their emotions and prejudices. Not the least pernicious and misleading of their theories is that which seeks to explain the fevered state of world politics as being due largely to the spiritual aberrations of the dictators. Thus, Hitler and Mussolini are megalomaniacs whose warped minds threaten the peace of the world.

However, Hitler and Mussolini are neither madmen nor fools. They are the cool, calm, and well-advised instruments of national policies. These policies existed before their advent to power and will endure as long as the economy of capitalism endures. The titanic drama of struggle between the major imperialisms, with their wars and fitful interludes of armed peace, is the normal condition of capitalist civilization.

The Stalinist gendarmes and their part-time fellow travelers have their own gray to preserve. They work their side of the street under the legend: Peace and Democracy. For Moscow has conveniently forgotten Lenin's shrewd analysis of the future of defeated Germany. Her highly developed industries, her observed, her large army of trained technicians, plus her strategic location in the heart of Europe, force her to expand or explode. This is the mortal compulsion of Nazi Teutonia. This is what Goering meant when he said, "Germany needs cannon before butter."

Short of the classless society there is no solution. The great betrayal of the Russian Revolution consists precisely in the Comintern's soft-pedaling of this fact.

DISILLUSIONED.
Washington, Sept. 20.

Disheartened

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I feel disheartened at my country's stand.

We once looked on while Belgium was thrown to the wolves, and were admonished to be neutral in thought.

History is about to repeat itself. Are we so vain that we would nurse and coddle our feelings with half truths and smugly scold the humanitarian feelings of our former allies who dread to re-enter that inferno into which a couple of gibbering maniacs would plunge them?

"They hired the money, didn't they?" Bah! They never had the feel of it in their palms. What they did was to set our industries humming with their demands for the products of our farms and factories. While they fought with their backs to the wall for our kind of civilization and theirs, we made good wages and some of us even built up small fortunes.

Then when the fight was over and, bleeding from a thousand wounds from the carnage, they expressed their willingness to repay us in kind, viz.: Goods and services. We protested and boosted our tariff walls against their goods. We wanted their slender stock of gold to add to our huge reserves of the metal. But, says some one, we sent our

'Perfidious Albion'

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I read your editorial with great interest for their intellectual value and usually with full approval.

But I cannot agree with you as to Czechoslovakia. For years the "Partition of Poland" was a shame. What is this?

The British have saved their skins, but for a time, only—"perfidious Albion." When Hitler reaches the Mediterranean, as in conjunction with Mussolini he means to do, the British Empire will be done and it will serve them right.

Apparently you blame the United States. But why? We have no treaty with that little country. The French have the grace to feel humiliated. We have yet to learn anything of British public opinion. The two "great democracies" will guarantee the future frontiers of Czechoslovakia—only a scrap of paper.

We won and paid for the last European war. England is again fond of Uncle Shylock. Let her pay her repudiated debts.

The "great democracies" have sold a weak but praiseworthy nation into slavery.
S. S.
Washington, Sept. 20.

'Justice First'

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: It is with sorrow that I read the headlines of your morning paper today, to note how Chamberlain has yielded to Hitler, and is leading Britain to a vassalship under Hitlerized German authority. May this soon be discontinued and the great British nation awake to its former integrity and leadership among nations.

But it is with pleasure, thankfulness and gratitude to the two writers of "Letters to the Editor" that I have read those signed by Halcott N. Bradley and Samuel Shenberg, for we can have no peace without justice and security to the independent democracies of the world. I agree with these two writers 100 per cent and would multiply it 1,000 per cent to be impressed upon the world of democracy to stand together for the supremacy of righteousness and justice. I wish to commend these letters to all readers.

German Traits

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I always read with interest the letters on your editorial page, and now I would like to express my view of the German-Czech situation.

The Germans have always been very poor losers, and they will take advantage of someone smaller or weaker than themselves. That is born in them. As a Hollander (now a naturalized American), and having lived within 10 or 12 miles of the German border for a number of years, I am in a position to speak from experience. I certainly wish I were in a position to help the Czechs beat those bulldozers.

If the Sudetens don't like it in Czechoslovakia, let them get out and go back to that great peace-maker, Hitler, and leave the Czechs alone. The same goes for the goose-steppers in this country; go to Germany and stay there; we are better off without you.

J. J. VERMEULEN.
Brentwood, Md., Sept. 20.

Honorable Peace

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: We see much now about "praying for world peace." But if we are to have peace, let us demand an honorable peace, and not a peace bought by throwing overboard our highest conceptions of right and justice. Let us rather pray to be delivered from an English and French peace.

"To life so dear or peace so sweet that they are to be bought at the price of dishonor? Forbid it, almighty God!"

The Post Impressionist

Indian Giver

WE HAD BEEN in Albuquerque for four days and were as well settled as birds of passage could hope to be. The apartment was one of a group of little plaster houses clustered about a common courtyard, bright with the determined greenness of well tended grass in a dry country. Great blue morning glories climbed over the walls, unaware that they were working overtime. One family determined to further the New Mexican atmosphere, had hung a huge bunch of dried red peppers over their doorway, and we often speculated on whether guests and peddlers could wait for an answer to the bell without having a fit of sneezing.

I arranged the "pasturals" in a bowl, gave the baby a drink of water and started to put away my groceries. Taking the paper bags out of the bottom of the stroller, my purse fell and I kicked it under the table out of reach of a toddler who still depended upon chairs to pull his way about the room. I had squandered my last cent on beef fillets and mushrooms and Spanish sherry, for company from home was passing through town.

I began making a salad dressing and had just dropped in a garlic clove when the doorbell gave a shrill scream. A blob of olive oil splattered out, missing my apron and darkening my red dress, so I went to the door with garlic on my hands and oil on my bosom. Outside, silhouetted against the light, stood a Navajo trader. He wore the traditional dress of his people, and his magenta hair ribbon clashed gorgeously with his red-brown skin. He carried his stock on his person in the form of silver and turquoise jewelry. Forgetting that my purse was flat I asked him to come in.

"Buy bracelet!" He slipped off a massive silver band with a dollar-sized turquoise flanked by a pair of scowling thunderbirds.

"No money," I replied.

"No money?" he echoed. His Indian logic could not reconcile my opening the door to him with a lack of purchasing power. Evidently his squaw was no window shopper. Then he smiled. "Look in," he suggested, pointing to the pocketbook under the table. I retrieved the purse and snapped open the coin compartment, letting it yawn in his face. His finger forefinger pointed to the pocketbook that held compact hairpins and calling cards.

"There, maybe," he said hopefully. I emptied the contents on the table and gestured toward the debris. "There," he beamed, pushing aside my compact to disclose a 50-cent piece that had fallen out of its proper place. He began taking off pins—narrow silver bars with infinitesimal blue chips—but I shook my head. They were neither gaudy nor barbaric enough for my taste. Then I saw on his left hand a very jewel of a ring—a beautiful turquoise, well cut and polished. It was a deep, mysterious green, which indicated that it was very old. The simple mounting, a twisting of rope and little balls, had the mellow look of ancient silver.

I had seen a very similar one on the bony finger of an old crone selling pottery on the road to Acoma. Here was an even deeper green, the green of fir and cedar, and the mounting was as bent and twisted as the finger that wore it. Here was no turquoise of the highly valued blue; it had little, if any, intrinsic value. Some swearing conquistador, in his avid search for gold, might have thrown it to the ground with a curse upon its meanness.

My Navajo's ring was not so old, perhaps, but at least it did not have the shiny look of wares made expressly for the tourist trade. I knew that the green stones are generally considered inferior, but even so, I could hardly hope to get it for 50 cents. The Indian stood motionless, reluctant to leave without making a trade.

"How much for that ring?" I demanded, but he shook his head. "Oh, no, no. This not to sell. Mine."

"I am sorry," I said. "It is beautiful, and if I had the money I should like to buy it."

He gazed at me for a moment, and then his black eyes brightened. "You give me dress!" and gestured toward the quilt-stained garment I was wearing. It was an old dress and had once been a respectable deep garnet. But repeated tubbings had done something perverse to the dye and each washday it became lighter and brighter, until I felt like a giant ginnia when I wore it. Snatching the baby in one arm—I had a confused idea regarding gypsies and Indians—I fled into the bedroom, peeled off the sunburst and donned a print.

"Do you think your wife will like it?" I asked, handing him the dress and 50-cent piece.

"I think," he nodded, and added confidently, "She gave me a ring." "Now, that's odd," I said. "I wanted it for my husband."

While he agreed that it was a beautiful ring, my lord, in his masculine prejudice against adornment, thought it might be more suitable for me than for him. However, he went back to work with his finger nicely decorated.

The Federal Diary

By Scott Hart

QUICK WORKERS in the FCA! On Wednesday afternoon Deputy Gov. F. F. Hill gets word that he becomes Governor, succeeding Gov. W. I. Myers; and in less than 24 hours the new Governor takes the oath of office, admires the flowers on his desk and Gov. Myers, his suitcases packed, leaves for his Cornell post "high above Cayuga's waters."

And as quickly, the new Governor, tall, lean, precise of speech and with a surgeon's deliberate eyes, rared at a 45 degree angle in his chair to contemplate how he never chose his life's work, of how it was thrust upon him by all the critical farm problems of the spring wheat belt where he grew up. All around him, FCA people were pleased at the appointment; Hill had worked hand-in-glove with Gov. Myers—who was popular—and they suspected that whoever had been very popular with Gov. Myers would succeed him.

THE LAST news in the construction of the Federal Triangle came yesterday when the Treasury Department decided to remove the triangle replica that for 10 years was a fixture in the Treasury's west entrance. Millions of tourists had viewed the replica, to marvel on the gigantic construction project, and to hope for a return here someday to see the enlarged sight. But now they all can see the Triangle, so Treasury removes the replica.

In its place will be exhibits of a more timely nature. Among these, the full-sized models used in creating U. S. money; and exhibits of currency sent in for redemption. In this you will see the greenbacks the farmers buried in Mason jars, that became soggy in the ground and were sent in for exchange for new greenbacks. And all the money that people have hidden in kitchen stoves against theft, only to find, horrified, that someone lighted the fire and charred the money.

PSA EMPLOYEES have received efficiency ratings for the first time since creation of the agency, only to find that many who have received high commendation on work from their own supervisors have received unusually low ratings. Cases of low underrating are wide, they are complaining and in a voice, through the U. F. W. A. local, they demand that all present ratings be recalled by the personnel office and new ratings be made as based on actual merit and efficiency. . . . Commissioner Samuel H. Ordway, speaking guardedly, as he should, says he is gratified at the response departments and agencies are making to the Commission's request for data on personnel to be excluded from status under the June 24 executive order; but the extent of his gratification won't be known until all the replies are studied, sometime after this Saturday. Most of the replies, incidentally, are studiously, even technically worded, and it will require considerable study to detect the fence-jumping, if any.

THE BEST insiders can't get next to what's in the President's mind regarding a new reorganization bill. That one is coming in follow-up of the defeated one is certain enough, and we have a notion that if the Civil Service Commission is left its three-member status under the new proposals, much of the opposition—or at least one hie encountered before—will disappear. Of course,

Elected to Congress

MRS. BESSIE M. GASQUE, widow of the late Representative Allard H. Gasque, of South Carolina, has been given the distinction of being first of her sex elected to House of Representatives from that State. It is unlikely she will be seated unless a special session is called, as the term she was elected to complete, ends next January.

all the emotional opposition, which expressed itself in hundreds of thousands of telegrams to Congressmen, may persist, and about this nothing can be done.

FARM CREDIT Administration will recommend to the Civil Service Commission that its attorneys in grades P-1, 2 and 3 be exempted from status until selection procedures can be streamlined out; that grades from P-4 up be selected through noncompetitive examinations. Exemptions will be asked for the assistant general counsel, the general solicitor and the general counsel.

Maybe these hearings will establish a precedent in Treasury for the adjustment of employee grievances, and in any event, it brings to mind the need for a formal court of appeals, something long talked about and longer in the coming.

Breyer Executors Ask Tax Refund

Executors of the estate of Henry W. Breyer, ice cream manufacturer, challenged yesterday an estate tax deficiency assessment of $10,732,916 and asked the board of tax appeals to order a refund of $195,293 which they said represented an overpayment of taxes.

Breyer, who lived at Ogonitz, Montgomery County, Pa., died at Miami Beach, Fla., March 5, 1936, leaving an estate valued by the Internal Revenue Bureau at $24,965,677.

The executors protested that the Internal Revenue Bureau overvalued at 16,000 shares of stock of the Henry W. Breyer Co. and objected to inclusion in the gross estate of $7,711,828 in gifts which Breyer made to his wife, Mrs. Edith S. Breyer; a son, Henry M. Breyer, Jr., and a daughter, Mrs. Catherine Breyer Morrilow.

The petition stated Breyer sold his ice cream company to the National Dairy Products Corporation in 1926 for $19,000,000.

Electricity Output Hits Year's Peak

New York, Sept. 21 (AP)—Production of electric power in the United States in the week ended September 17 totaled 2,214,775,000 kilowatt hours, a new peak for 1938, the Edison Electric Institute reported today.

The week's volume represented a more-than-seasonal gain of 8.1 per cent over the preceding week's 2,048,580,000 kilowatt hours, and a gain of 2.9 per cent over the 2,280,782,000 for the like week of 1937.

What do You know about that!

"What's Chamberlain afraid of? England could swamp Germany today almost single-handed."

"Hold on—the Empire might, but England can't. And there's evidence that all her dominions wouldn't fight to save the Czechs."

"Sure, the party purge stopped—but that won't take much steam out of the New Deal steamroller."

"Whoa, get the whole story. Moley says it's doubtful now if the High Command can name the party standard-bearer in 1940."

"Federalized medical aid? That'd probably be another political farce. Anyhow, the doctors will fight it tooth-and-nail."

"Oh, no they won't. The American Medical Association itself is already discussing a Federal Department of Health."

WHAT does the purge fiasco hint for 1940? Who really forced England's abrupt about-face? How does the American Medical Association stand now on Federal intervention?

When Separated From Husband, But Not Divorced, May Woman Accept Her Men's Attention?

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I am 21 years old, have been married three years, have no children and have been separated from my husband for about five months now. I am getting a divorce, but it will probably be a year or two before it will be final. Here is the problem: I have had opportunities to have dates. Is there any harm in my going out, or must I wait until I have the divorce? It seems very foolish that I should have to wait, but I want to keep my good reputation and everyone's respect for me. Please advise me which is correct.

MRS. M. K.

DEAR MRS. M. K. There is no common sense reason why you shouldn't enjoy a normal social life while waiting for your divorce, although in special cases there are sometimes special reasons why a woman in your position must conduct herself as to be not only above reproach, but above suspicion of reproach. For instance, if there is any possibility that your husband may attempt to contest the divorce suit and meet your allegations with counter-allegations of a defamatory sort, you have a personal obligation to conduct yourself with the utmost discretion. However, if such a possibility exists, you should get your lawyer's advice concerning the wisdom of having beaux during this interval.

The woman of really fastidious taste, who highly (and I think properly) evaluates society's good (and well-founded) opinion of her character and conduct, will not be in too great haste to start "going about" with men after separating from her husband, however. When she does begin picking up the threads of social contacts suitable to the unattached woman, she will choose her men friends with discriminating judgment, keeping the list definitely small and the relationships pleasantly impersonal, and will, for the most part, surround herself with group chaperonage, rather than associate with them in tête-à-tête intimacy under her own roof.

She will be circumspect in the matter of hours and will avoid public night-spots of the giddy variety. Dining, dancing, the theater, sports, etc., enjoyed in moderation in groups or occasionally in a two-some, will make up the pattern of her social life, and she will suffer no loss of public respect. Indeed, she will win its casual approval, for her excellent behavior in a difficult situation.

was inhumanly impudent and indicative of inner vulgarity. If it was in the nature of a rude and defiant denial, on his part, of your parents' right to exercise a protective guardianship over your conduct or your relationship with him, they may be richly justified in forbidding him the house, as one who has grossly presumed on trustful hospitality. Supporting their attitude is justified, you are showing very poor judgment (not to mention lamentable lack of principle) in continuing to see him by stealth.

Young Girl's Problem

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I am 18, and very much in love with a boy my own age. He has a fairly good position and I have one that offers opportunities for advancement. We have been going together since our early teens, and graduated together from junior high school and high school. My family seemed to like him very much until one day when they got into an argument with him, and he said some things to them which he regretted later.

They sent him away and told him never to return, although he later apologized, once in person (coming to the house to do so) and also by letter. (Also, during the two weeks he was trying to straighten things out, he wrote me several letters which I never received. I was told that mother destroyed them when they came.) The family refuses to forgive him.

I have been seeing him without their knowledge and would like to know how I can make them realize his slip of the tongue was due to temper and that he is really sorry. I dislike seeing him without their permission, even though he means so much to me. Other relatives think my parents are making a grave mistake; that they are only throwing us closer together. Please tell me what to do, and answer as soon as possible.

With everything left to speculation, with no means of knowing whether the relationship should be continued or broken off, entirely in the dark as to why your parents regard the young man as an unfit companion, I am powerless to give you advice or assistance along the lines solicited.

More Evidence Needed

DEAR H. E. S.: One can't very well advise you in this situation without knowing what the quarrel was about, and whether your beau's "slip of the tongue" was understandable and excusable (considering the provocation) or whether it

Ostrich Plumes Used as Bandings For Long Veils

Paris (U.P.)—This ostrich business is getting more serious by the hour. The latest outburst of plumage came in the form of feather embroidered veils—yes, veils—designed by Mme. Suzanne Talbot, whose millinery ingenuity has made her the Duchess of Windsor's and Countess Barbara Hutton Reventlow's hatter. Buyers and fashion writers gaped, aghast, when they saw the plumed veils adorning Talbot's hats. At first glance the tiny bits of colored ostrich down looked like ordinary embroidery.

Longer Jacket Flatters Figure

By Marshall Adams,
The Post Fashion Editor.

THE LONGER sport jacket has come into grace this fall, much to the delight of curvaceous younger-set members, of matrons with hips, and of all women sized over 18 or 20. Junoesque women have been striving for years, without much encouragement, to purchase sports coats, jackets and suits that do not strain, hug or accentuate their most dangerous curves. New signs of contentment have swept these maturely proportioned figures, for the longer sports jacket comprises not only this season's most important suit silhouette, but it has been prophesied by style mentors as here to stay.

The two-piece suit illustrated at right has a straight-lined skirt of monotone wool and two vertical front and back panels of the jacket which are slit to embrace a belt of the skirt's material. The nubby black and white flecked hairy wool which forms the jacket proves that a easy-looking tweed can be used with satisfactory results for the not-so-slim figure. The day of baggy, smock-like suits, deluding the wearer into thinking she disguises her bad figure points, is gone.

Such an ensemble as the one pictured would be appropriately and comfortably at home on the race track, at country fairs or auctions, at football or hockey games, or even when fetching family or husband with the motor car from town to country.

A Woman's New York

by Alice Hughes

New York, Sept. 21. WHEN THE big red school houses ring the first bell here in the fall, the very statistics are enough to knock off your doll hat. Think of 762 public schools admitting 1,125,000 kids to be stuffed with book learning by 37,850 dear teachers, and you get an astonishing picture of our school system.

Naturally, as befitting a dizzy metropolis, ALICE HUGHES, the youngsters are inflicted with education in its most virulent modern form. Its foundation, of course, the three R's of today—reading, ritzing and ribbing. From these the babies pass at once to the study of French surrealism and Freudian psychology. Under this treatment they are fit to face the losing battle of life at the age of 10. Daddy can then relax with a bottle and a fishing rod.

Poking about this year's public school scene here I find a constant growth in the number of vocational training schools of all types, in the high school grades. The only school I have found is the use of white blackboards with colored chalk at Washington Irving High School, which is probably a stunt like the red tennis ball or the yellow baseball. Then again, it may encourage a sense of beauty among the Washington Irving scholars, or may not. Education here lay a slight drop in enrollment and a birth-rate drop.

The school problem is again amuck in our little "home" (ha, ha), Master Martin, now six, is again infesting the Hunter College Model School, and established his mental discipline by forgetting his new teacher's name by 6 p. m. the first day. The kid must be a genius. Not, of course, a dope.

Anyway, they go again—cranking the dear little air-conditioned skulls! Who doesn't know the problems of an aging reporter for a bout with long-diploma?

GIRL ABOUT TOWN—Carefully searching the Normandie the other day, I found Peggy Hopkins Joyce hidden behind a pile of reporters. Peg, still unmarried at the moment, sat she looked forward to a saucer of champagne after a year on the water cart that she had won a ship's pool of $1,350 on the day's run, and that the nice man with her was guarding her traveling collection of costly gew-gaws. Peg has some Late bulletin on upswished hair, Matthew Hyland, millinery head of a great Avenue shoppe, opines that the hair of the future will be established as a fashion, but will not reach its real popularity peak for another six months. Sly ras-cals, the scratch-designers. A long bob just needed good home care, but these condemned swishes and curls require a visit or two a week. If the lady is not to look like last year's birds nest, it's the upkeep, girls, that licks us and stuffs the beauty parlor owners with caviar.

'Doing Over' Old Home Is Artistic Test

By Elizabeth MacRae Boykin.

THEY'RE a dignified pair, Mr. and Mrs. H. de L. Well-to-do, rather formal, cultured. And we were delighted, when they did the old home over, to see how pleasantly they had translated a mood of smart polish into the tangible decorations of their living room and dining room.

Mrs. de L. kept her lovely jewel-toned Oriental rugs in the living room and quite a lot of her old furniture, but she has entirely new colors and there are several new pieces of incidental furniture. She used a deep mustard color for the two bedside chairs and gave them a very fashionable look by finishing the seams with a heavy rope cord and using the same cord around the founce in a loop design.

The sofa got a gray-blue covering and one extra odd chair is ering and one extra odd chair is in a formal figured material is predominantly gold in effect, and the draperies are old gold—a charming effect they make against the pale blue-gray of the walls.

The dining room is across the hall—and the pale blue-gray walls are continued throughout. But in hall and dining room the floors are carpeted in dark red broadloom. The dining chairs and the draperies in the dining room are in a flowered linen with a white ground, so that the effect is fresh and different, although harmonious. A collection of fine white porcelain on gilt brackets adds interest to the walls.

Your Figure Stars Belie Standards in 'Streamlines'

Virginia Bruce, Sonja Henie, Helen Vinson Differ, But Each Is 'Perfect'

By Ida Jean Kain.

If you have any idea that there is a standard set of measurements for streamlines, a comparison of Virginia Bruce with Sonja Henie should change your mind. Aside from the fact that they are both blonde and that each is equipped with a plenitude of enchantment for the moviegoer, they are about as different as it is possible for two people to be.

We'll take Miss Bruce first. . . she has a waistline of 27½ inches, hips that are 38 inches and a bust, 36 inches. She is 5 feet 8½ inches tall and weighs 128 pounds. With that weight and those measurements, Miss Bruce is superstreamlined.

Now, if Sonja Henie has those same measurements, her petite figure would be almost as wide as it is tall, for she is only 5 feet two. But fortunately, Miss Henie tips the scales at a mere 110 pounds and her measurements are like this: Waist, 26½ inches; hips, 35½ inches; bust, 34 inches. Those measurements would turn Miss Bruce into a wraith!

Structure can make just as much difference as height in the measurements that are synonymous with streamlines. The fascinating Helen Vinson, almost as tall as Virginia Bruce, weighs 120 pounds for her 5 feet 8½ inches of height. Her measurements are: Bust, 34 inches; hips, 36 inches; waist, 25 inches.

And yet each of these figures is perfect, and the reason is not hard to find. The career that brought fame to the scintillating little ice star helps her to keep a lovely figure. Actually, Miss Henie is the "short stocky type," and she could very easily have too much waist and hips. But those graceful twists, turns and kicks on the ice are exercise—they are slimming!

Virginia Bruce is a natural born relaxer and does nothing for beauty a good part of the time, but not too much of it. She gets her exercise in golf, tennis and bicycling, and because she seems to have struck a happy balance in the matter of rest and exercise, she is one of the stars who grows more beautiful every year.

Helen Vinson is another one, and, oddly enough, her favorite exercise is one that most women shy away from for fear it will spread the hips. She is an enthusiastic horsewoman and rides several times a week. Her 38 inch hip measurement is tiny in comparison with her height.

While these three stars have figures that are very different, their programs are essentially the same. They get the exercise that makes for streamlines regardless of their height of stature, and when they adopt a similar plan your figure worries will be over, too.

Black Velvet Useful

Paris (U.P.)—Be sure to guard any pieces of black velvet you may have. If the piece is small it will make a flat bow to lay across the top of a black felt hat with a small brim and two crossed quills cut off. If the piece is bigger it can be twisted into the shape of a little German bonnet which sits demurely on top of the head while a heavy black veil falls all around. Or try a flat "lambourne" of black velvet with a deep veil, stiff and wide-meshed, of iridescent colors.

Homecoming

MR. PUFFER—Hello everybody.

MRS. PUFFER—Oh, Sam, before you take off your hat won't you run down to the store and get a bottle of cream? The grocery boy forgot—

MR. PUFFER—Yes, yes, in a minute. Let me just sit down—

JUNIOR—Daddy, did you bring my scratch pads?

MR. PUFFER—No, I forgot. I'll get some at the drug store.

AUNT SUE—Sam, here's a telephone number to call. It's something about a credit company.

SISTER—Oh, hello, Daddy! Say, you don't care if I go to the show tonight, do you—with a bunch of girls?

MR. PUFFER—I don't know. Ask your mother—

MRS. PUFFER—I told her she'd have to ask you. She's already been out two nights this week and I told her as far as I was concerned—

MR. PUFFER—Well, settle it between yourselves.

MRS. PUFFER—I told her you'd have to decide. Another thing, Junior was in a fight again today with that Bilkins boy—

JUNIOR—He started it—

MR. PUFFER—Well, tell me about it later. Let me see the paper.

MRS. PUFFER—Say, Sam, while you're up would you mind straightening the curtains? You're so tall—There, that's lots better—now if you'll just straighten that picture—

SISTER—Daddy, what about my going to the movies?

MR. PUFFER—Oh, well, go on. Where's the paper?

AUNT SUE—Sam, is there really going to be war?

MRS. PUFFER—Well, if she falls at school this term it'll be your fault.

JUNIOR—Daddy, what's a snark?

MR. PUFFER—A snark? Let's see—

MRS. PUFFER—Just a minute, Sam, what kind of a salad would you like for dinner?

MR. PUFFER—Oh, I don't know. Any kind.

AUNT SUE—I tell her to make a nice lettuce and cottage cheese—

MRS. PUFFER—Wouldn't you rather have a nice fruit salad?

AUNT SUE—Well, if we have apple pie for dessert—

MRS. PUFFER—Sam, would you rather have apple pie or some of the fruit jello we had at noon?

MR. PUFFER—I don't know. Let me read the paper a minute, won't you?

AUNT SUE—Sam, if they don't give Hitler Czechoslovakia, what'll he do?

MRS. PUFFER—Sam, you won't forget about going for the cream, will you?

MR. PUFFER—No! If you'll just let me rest a minute—

MRS. PUFFER—All right, but while you're resting, I wish you'd look over these tax bills that came today. I can't figure 'em out.

AUNT SUE—They're too much! Honestly, we'll all be in the poorhouse.

JUNIOR—Daddy, I can't make this airplane fly.

MRS. PUFFER—Oh, yes, and some one called up about the insurance.

MR. PUFFER—For heaven's sakes, let me alone a minute, I'm tired.

MRS. PUFFER—All right. Now then let's all leave Daddy to read the paper awhile. You won't forget to go for the cream, will you?

MR. PUFFER—No—in just five minutes.

MRS. PUFFER—Oh, Sam, just one thing more! When you go for the cream, you'd better get some washing powder. . . and we're out of paper towels. . . oh, yes, and you need razor blades—I used your last one today—

MR. PUFFER—For the love of—

MRS. PUFFER—Oh, yes, and say—would you rather have mayonnaise or French dressing for your salad?

Jewelry Important Item In Accessories for Fall

Accessories for women have taken on many new angles. Jewelry is demanded by practically every costume, with only the caution of "the right piece in the right spot." Wide-at-the-front chokers for plain dresses necklines, simulated coins at the neck and wrist, the return of the cameo, this year as a pendant, are among the new trends. Earrings are a necessity, particularly for those who follow the fashion edict for high-worn hair. Handbags remain large, but are less bulky than those of a previous season.

Florida Crystal Pearls Are Made of Fish Eyes

MIAMI BEACH, FLA. (U.P.)—Puzzled jewelers studied Gustav Bohland's "Florida crystal pearls," surprised to learn they were made from the crystalline lens of the eyes of fish. The unique "gems" were produced by Bohland, a sculptor, after years of experimentation. They are hard brilliant pearl-like substances from the eyes of many different fish.

Society and Real Estate Boom in Hunt Country

Renters Snapping Up All Available Estates as Cool Weather Heralds Fox Hunting Season; Mrs. Wolff Here

By Hope Ridings Miller,
The Post Society Editor.

WITH THE RETURN of crisp weather comes a new accent on horse pursuits. And up from the Virginia hunting country comes word that as the fox chasing season approaches, available rent houses are going like taffy at a country fair. There's noticeable influx of new residents already and the real estate business is booming.

HOPE R. MILLER.

Since the Capital's sporting gentry knows the hunting country down to its last meadow and lane, real estate news is social news for a sizable number of our residents. For when October's bright blue weather rolls around, all roads on week-ends will be leading toward the hunting districts, and it's just as well for visitors to know who's living where.

Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence Kaufmann, of Pittsburgh, who frequently visit in Washington, have rented the Middleburg home of Mr. and Mrs. Walter West. The latter, in turn, have taken "Kentmere" in Clarke County, near Boyce, and will move there in the next few days. Mr. and Mrs. Harold Talbot, of Long Island, have taken Mrs. Henry Fairfax's home, Oakham, for the winter but will not move in until November 1 as Mrs. Fairfax always stays there through October before going to her home in Richmond.

Mrs. Norman Toerger, of Long Island, has rented Vine Hill on the edge of Middleburg from Miss Katherine Woodward. One of the loveliest houses in that section of the country, the place is better known (why, I wonder) as the "Poor Farm." Christopher Greer, of Greenwich, Conn., has leased Old Welbourne in the Piedmont hunting country from Dr. Archibald C. Randolph and will move into the house next week.

MR. AND MRS. HAROLD MENKEN, of New York, who recently purchased the Richardson place near Upperville, spend each week-end and plan to be there much of the time during the fall and winter. Mrs. Menken formerly was Miss Weber, daughter of Joseph Weber, of the famous "Weber and Fields" team. Her father, incidentally, is now enjoying life in Virginia himself, says his favorite diversion is "just sitting on a porch in a rocking chair, gazing at the Blue Ridge Mountains."

Mr. and Mrs. Paul Mellon are frequently visitors to the hunting country these days. They expect to move to their farm, which is now being remodeled, about October 15. And still more real estate news: Mrs. Eva Shaffer Spilman, of New York, has rented Mrs. Arthur White's house in Middleburg and plans to spend most of the season there.

Miss Connie Regan, well-known sports lover of Long Island and Kentucky, is the guest of Miss Nany Fred, at Sunny Bank, in the hunting country. Miss Regan and her sister, Mrs. Regan McKinney, plan to take a house near Middleburg and will hunt with different packs. Mrs. McKinney formerly was Miss Jean Regan, and she has an extensive circle of friends both in Virginia and in Washington.

SOCIETY-GO-ROUND: It's business that brought Mrs. Henry Drummond-Wolff back to Washington for a brief visit. The former Margaret Fahnstock, daughter of the late Mrs. Gibson Fahnstock, told me yesterday she was back to attend to some details in connection with her mother's estate. She and her daughter, Miss Mary Stokes, plan to be here until the end of the week as guests of Mrs. Eldridge Jordan and then will go to New York for a brief stay. Chances are Mrs. Drummond-Wolff will be back early next week for another short visit and then will be off once more for New York, whence she will sail for England October 5. Miss Stokes plans to come back to Washington to spend the winter, but only a post-deb capacity. "Two debuts are enough for any girl we think," said Mrs. Drummond-Wolff. "After Newport and the Court of St. James it seems Mary has done enough coming out." ... Just when Signora Augusto Rosso, wife of the Italian Ambassador to the Soviet Union, is coming to Washington even her best friends won't tell. Say they don't know and that her letters are vague as to her exact date for getting here. Anyway, partying plans for her are well under way and she will be fêted right and left as soon as she hits town. If she waits much longer, her visit will be very brief. October is her sailing date and she plans to spend at least two weeks in New York before then.

About The Town

With Dudley Harmon

MARY COOTES, who successfully combines athletics with glamour, has returned to her home in Alexandria after a seven-month tennis tour, which began in Cairo, Egypt, and ended at Forest Hills.

High spot in the trip was playing in the tournament at Wimbledon, which Mary describes as being what Broadway is to an actor from the sticks. Dudley Harmon, who was in the box adjacent to that reserved for the royal family, so Mary got daily close-ups of the King and Queen, Queen Mary, the Duchess of Kent and others of rank guaranteed to dazzle American eyes. Mary reports that the Dowager Queen got the biggest hand on entering the box of any of the royal family.

WITH HELEN WILLS, Donald Budge and others of the tennis great, she attended the great jubilee ball held annually at Grosvenor House in London after Wimbledon. But the brilliance of Grosvenor House didn't outshine the tournament dinner Mary attended in a little suburb of Paris.

The party was held at the town hall and presided over by the mayor, who, carried away with emotion and champagne, made one flowery speech after another in the best traditions of French gallantry.

Together with her partner, Gracyn Wheeler, Mary played in several tournaments in Germany, as well as at Nordwijk, in Holland; Danzig, Budapest and Basel.

Lieut. Col. and Mrs. Sima lived at Battery Park, Md., until the former was transferred to the Canal Zone, where he is now on duty at Gorgas Hospital.

Mr. and Mrs. Pariseau are living at 4311 Marble Hall road, Baltimore.

Party Postponed

The reception of the Army Industrial College, which was scheduled for this afternoon at the Army-Navy Country Club, has been indefinitely canceled owing to the sudden death of the chief of the Army Air Corps, Maj. Gen. Oscar Westover.

ed on a diplomatic passport. She obtained one because for the first two months of her sojourn abroad she worked as a translator for the State Department at a conference in Cairo.

According to Mary, Germany takes its tennis more seriously than any other country. The time when Schmeling was defeated by Louis here, was also the day when the two best Germans in the tourney where she was entered were beaten by a Czech and a Pole.

Mary says the atmosphere for the next few hours was positively uncomfortable. If it ever stops raining, Mary hopes to enter the tournament now supposed to be in progress at the Chevy Chase Club. She will leave October 3 with her father, Col. Harry N. Coates, for the matches at Hot Springs, Va., after which she intends to take a vacation from tennis. Col. and Mrs. Coates went to England early last summer and returned to this country with their daughter.

Undaunted by a Bar Harbor temperature which must be somewhere just above the freezing point at this time of year, a number of Washington residents are lingering doggedly on there. Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Bell Sweeney have not yet set a date for returning to the Capital, though they're expected vaguely before the first of the month. They have been among the most active socially of the colonists and earlier in the week gave a dinner and theater party. ... Mrs. Nathan Wyeth, who has been at the Maine resort since midsummer, will be in Washington again September 28.

HERE AND THERE: Mrs. Truman (real) did not go to California, as it was reported she would do, but has been at Saratoga Springs, N. Y. ... Mrs. Willard Reed, the former Mrs. Cowles, is expected to fly here for a short visit later in the week from Chicago, where she has resided since her marriage a year ago. ... Mrs. Hamilton V. Bryan and Mrs. John Magruder arrive in New York today after a summer in Europe. They toured several countries with two children and a station wagon. Mrs. Magruder's daughter, Miss Agnes Magruder, will make her debut this winter.

Mrs. Fred Kent Plans Trip Abroad

Mrs. Fred Kent plans to close her house on Thirty-fifth street this winter and visit her son-in-law and daughter, Count and Countess Carlo di Robilant, in Venice, Italy. Countess di Robilant was formerly Miss Carolyn Bolton Kent, of Washington and Asheville, N. C.

Miss Barbara Kent, another daughter, left recently for Poughkeepsie, N. Y., where she will enter her second year at Vassar. As a farewell party for Miss Barbara Kent, Mrs. Kent entertained recently at a farm dance at Normandy Farm. Sydney's orchestra played during the evening, and a number of this season's debutantes were among the guests. Miss Jane Kuntz and Miss Beatrice Talley, classmates of Miss Kent at Vassar, were in the company, which also included Miss Mimi Worthington, Miss Houston Miller, Miss Margaret Godron, Miss Annette Gordon, Miss Elaine Darlington, Miss Letitia Knox, Miss Bille Byrd West, Miss Mary Gruman, Miss Betty Drayton, Miss Elinor Elliott, Miss Nancy Hoskinson, Miss Angela Adams, Miss Nancy Rheem, and Miss Sidney Boleter.

Others there were Philip Evans, Harry Hoskinson, Jr., Sidney Kent, Victor and Davis Whitlock, Robert and Berkeley Simmons, Gene Owens, Edgar Prochnik, Jr., Julian Colquh, Chase Cove, John Buchanan, Calvert Bowie, Lyle Macklin, Gordon Eccles, Robert Neopold, and Wentworth Lippebarger.

D'Entrecasteaux Officers Give Farewell Party

Most of Entertainment Given on Decks, Despite Cool Breezes From Potomac; Comdr. Serpette, Assisted by French Attache, Receives

In spite of the cool weather, most of the entertainment given yesterday aboard the visiting French boat D'Entrecasteaux took place on the shiny decks outside where breezes from the Potomac swept about the numerous signal flags draped hither and yon in festive fashion. Guests, of course, wandered up and down brass stairways and peered into spotless cabins, but the boat, itself, was too small to permit of much partying indoors.

Champagne flowed with real French hospitality; maddies, wearing the typically Gallic sailor caps topped with red pom-poms, stood at attention; and music was broadcast from a radio amidships, although chatting seemed more popular than dancing.

French Attache Helps Receive

Commander Paul Serpette greeted the guests as they came up the gangplank and was assisted by the Naval Attache of the French Embassy, Commander Pierre Benesch and Mme. Benesch. Putting in a late appearance, the French Ambassador, Count Rene de Saint-Quentin, captured the spotlight and continued to hold it from then on.

Glimpsed among the many who attended the event, which was given as a farewell by the French officers visiting here, were the Rear Admiral George Pettengill, and Mrs. Pettengill, she wearing a gray tweed suit and a black hat trimmed with a dashing feather. With them was their son, William Pettengill.

Also at the party, wearing a black suit and black tricorn hat with a veil, was Miss Sally Holmes, daughter of Rear Admiral and Mrs. Ralston Holmes; Miss Dolly Corbin, Miss Carolyn Chantry, and Miss Christine Gawn, daughter of Capt. and Mrs. J. G. Gawn.

Diplomats at Party on Boat

Still others were Mrs. Patterson Roberts, dressed in a navy blue coat and wearing a gardenia corsage; Mrs. James Hamilton Lewis, wife of Senator Lewis; and Miss Nancy Brereton, who was with her brother-in-law and sister, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Swazey.

Guests from the diplomatic set included the German Naval Attache, Vice Admiral Robert Witthoef-Emden, the latter looking very smart in a check suit and silver fox; Frau Herbert Blankenhorn, wife of Senator Blankenhorn, and the German Ambassador, Count Kengo Kobayashi and Mme. Kobayashi.

Those present from the French Embassy in addition to the Ambassador, were the Counsellor, Jacques Truelle; the Military Attache, Lieut. Col. Emmanuel Lombard and Mme. Lombard; Jacques Dumaine, First Secretary, and Count Gabriel Gramont.

The D'Entrecasteaux will leave tomorrow to continue its cruise to Jacksonville, Miami and Martinique.

Dr. Andre Salmont And Wife, of Paris, At the Mayflower

Dr. Andre Salmont and Mme. Salmont, of Paris, are at the Mayflower while Dr. Salmont attends the International Congress for Scientific Management.

Mme. Salmont, the former Miss Zola Wallace, daughter of the late Bernard Phillip Wallace, of McKeenport, Pa., spent part of her girlhood here at Immaculate Seminary.

At the conclusion of the congress, Dr. Salmont and his wife and daughter, Mlle. Andree Salmont, will tour the United States and Canada. Dr. Salmont is a professor at the National Conservatory of Arts and Crafts in Paris, and is medical adviser to many French industrial organizations.

Mrs. E. S. Smith Joins Mr. and Mrs. Noyes

Chile Army's Horse Team Is in Capital

Officers, Mounts Slip Into Town Without Bands or Bunting

Without bands or bunting, members of the Chilean Army Horse Show team which will compete at Meadowbrook on October 20 to 22 with teams from Mexico and the United States, slipped into town yesterday. It isn't often that distinguished visitors arrive in Washington so quietly as did these men who will take part in the fourth Inter-American Horse Show, and thereby hangs the following story.

When the S. S. Santa Maria docked in New York on September 5, three of the officers were aboard, Capt. Eduardo Yanez, captain of the team; Lieut. Pelayo Iaurrita and Lieut. Guillermo Castro. During their stay in New York they were guests of Mrs. Henry L. Doherty. Then yesterday, after some delay due to storms at sea, the S. S. Lara docked in Baltimore, bringing Lieut. Herman Vergil, the fourth member of the team, four soldiers and eight mounts. They were met by their three brother officers at the pier by Javier Urrutia, Chilean Consul in Baltimore, and Lieut. Col. Harry Pendleton, representing the United States Army.

Although officers of the Inter-American Horse Show Association had been in communication with officials of the Chilean American Society in New York, they had received no notification that the team was arriving. However, the Chilean team members are now out at the Shoreham, the soldiers quartered at Fort Myer, the horses congenitally chewing their hay in the comfortable stables. As soon as they lose their sea legs they will go into training for the spectacular international team jumping events, the highlight of the forthcoming show.

Saposses Honor Barsky at Party For Spain Relief

Dr. E. K. Barsky, chief of foreign medical aid in Spain, gave his second talk of the week in behalf of the American Relief Ship campaign last evening at a reception given in his honor by Dr. and Mrs. David Saposs.

Assisting the hostess in arranging for the reception were Mrs. Samuel Liss, Mrs. Clark Warburton, Mrs. Mordecai Ezekiel, Miss Anne Berenson, Mrs. Harry Shapiro, and Mrs. Edward Hollander.

Massed in the drawing room where guests were received were vases of zinnias and asters, presented to the host and hostess by Mrs. Ezekiel, who culled them from her own prize garden. During the evening Dr. Barsky spoke of the need for food in Spain and enlisted aid for the American relief ship, which is scheduled to sail for that country early in October.

Hurricane Winds Spare Southern States, Strike New England

The Post is the only daily morning paper in Washington with A. P. WIREPHOTO Service.

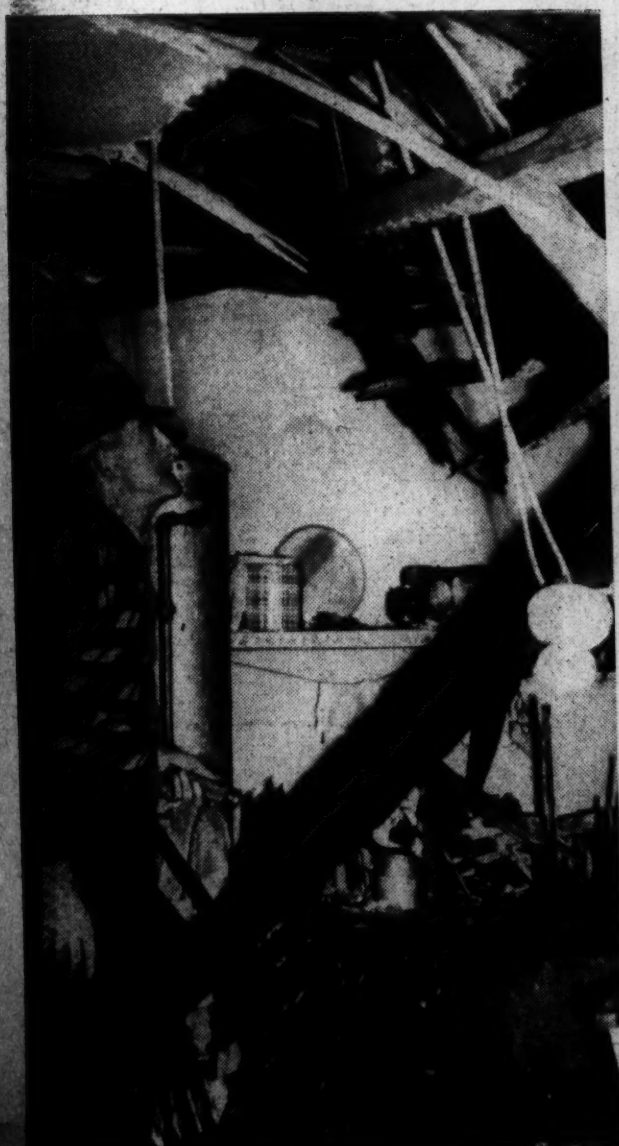

Factories Wrecked by Floods; Provincetown Hit Hard

Torrents that followed the hurricane swept through industrial cities and towns along the coast from Long Island to New Hampshire. Seawalls and bridges crumbled under tidal waves. At right, factory at Southbridge, Mass., that became a culvert when raging Quinboag River undermined section of town. At left, view in Provincetown, where Seekonk River went on a rampage.

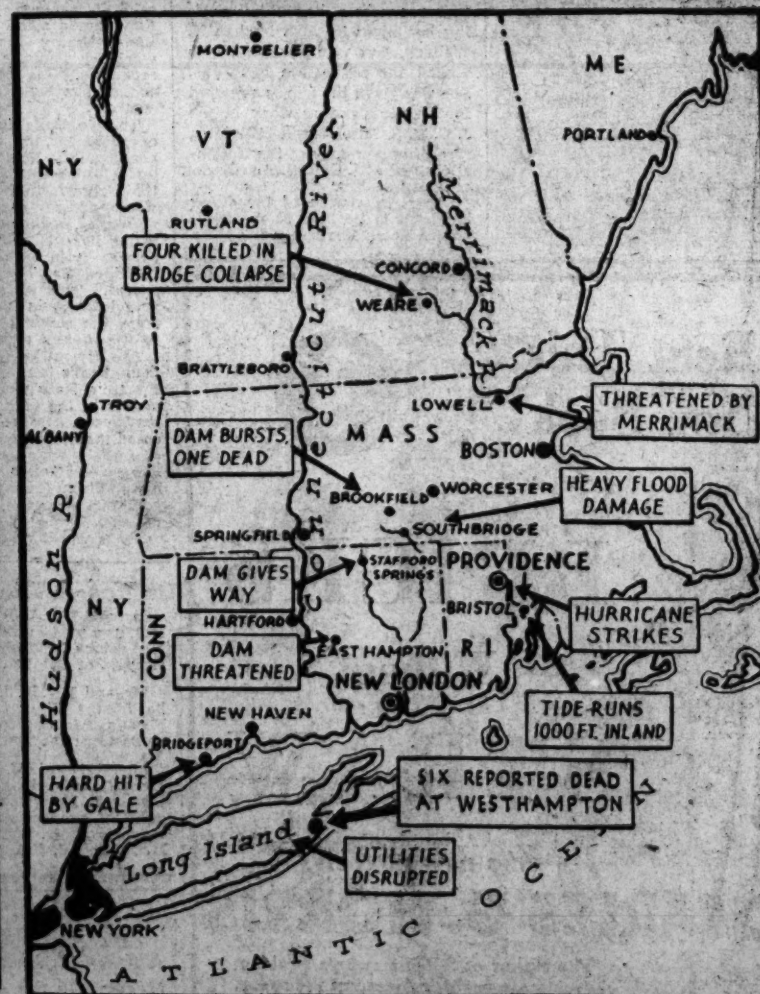

Death Toll Mounts as Winds Lash Coast

Although Maryland and Virginia escaped serious damage as the hurricane raced northward to vent its wrath on New England points, a 48 mile-an-hour wind was felt here. Above, refreshment stand in East Potomac Park that was blown down. At left, police at Williston Park, Long Island, who helped evacuate more than 100 families. At right, waterfront area in Provincetown, where bridges were swept away and home carried from foundations by the torrents.

Fire House Wrecked by High Winds

At Quincy, Mass., a huge tree smashed through recently constructed fire station, demolishing the building. At left, a resident of Brooklyn, N. Y., surveys damage in his kitchen, wrecked when chimney toppled through roof of the house.

Where Tropical Storm Lashed Atlantic Seaboard

Map shows points hardest hit by hurricane that struck with full fury in vicinity of Long Island, Providence, R. I., and Mass. Floods resulting from several days rainfall along the coast added to the damage. Deaths charged to floods and storm were mounting, with many missing.

Yanks Go Boom!

There are strange goings-on these days in the American League... from force of habit we almost said American League pennant race, until we were suddenly reminded that the Yankees removed both the pennant and race aspects from the league some time ago.

It seems, however, that the pennant war is still going on. The Yankees have now gone and lost six straight games. That comes under the heading of startling news, because when the Yankees lose as many as two in a row they are in a prolonged slump.

At three straight defeats, Col. Ruppert, up in his brewery office, lifts his head to the heavens and demands to know what he has done to deserve such a perditional ball club: Manager Joe McCarthy removes his hair by the fistful, and dirty-faced little boys in the street ask their idols to say it ain't so.

But here the Yankees lose six straight and nobody appears unduly excited. Col. Ruppert, interviewed at great length last night, smiled and said: "When does the World Series start?" Manager Joe McCarthy threatens no changes in his line-up and does not appear even to be displeased. The dirty-faced kids in the street, when questioned closely, chorused, "Aw, what of it?"

They know that the Yankees will snap out of it when the chips are down... when they start shooting for that 60 per cent winner's end in the World Series. With the pennant won, the Yankees are only marking time until the series starts. They kiss off these defeats as if they were so many training camp exhibitions. They aren't important. The important games were won back there in June, July and August.

Are They Trying?
It wouldn't be quite proper to say that the Yankees aren't trying to win these remaining games even with the pennant won. They are trying, but not with quite the same dash, nerve and desperation. Perhaps it is best said that they are willing to win, but that if they lose it isn't very serious.

We can take you back to 1928, for example. Miller Huggins' team of Yankees in Florida that spring was the joke of the Grapefruit League. It couldn't win from any club in the training games and was getting licked regularly in a series with the Brooklyn Dodgers. There was talk of matching the Yankees with the hotel Yankees in an attempt to stir up some kind of an even game for the St. Pete Public. That was 1928, as we were saying. That season the Yankees won the American League pennant without much trouble.

More than anything else, the Yankees remind this department of a former featherweight champion of the world named Bat Batinello. Bat beat the Frenchman, Andre Roufus, for the world title in 1929. It was a distinct upset and folks began to wonder exactly how good a fighter this Batinello might be. They had their doubts when featherweight punks began to lick Batinello in a series of non-title bouts.

But Batinello won!
Finally Batinello was persuaded to lay his title on the line against no less than Fidel La Barba. The champion, who had recently been licked by such as Eddie Shea, Roger Barnard, Andy Callahan and numerous other non-titles, was a tremendous under-dog against the capable La Barba. And who won? Batinello, very convincingly.

That victory by Batinello was also tabbed as a fluke, however. When the little Italian out of Hartford later managed to get himself licked by a raft of second fighters in another series of non-title matches, Batinello in almost every case looked like a bum. He didn't even faintly resemble a champion. They matched him with Kid Chocolate, the flashiest thing extant in featherweight ranks. Chocolate was a heavy favorite, but Batinello was the winner. Any time he had that title on the line he was a very serious kind of fist fighter.

He was the Yankee team of the prize fight industry, losing when it didn't count and crushing the opposition when it did.

Mack Is Alarmed
But the Yankees' string of defeats seem to have alarmed no less than Cornelius Mack, the lean leader of the Athletics, who cocked a warning finger at the New York Club and said that he had been a care. "I don't like to see a team lose after it has won the pennant," said Mack. "There is always the danger that it may not be able to snap out of its easy ways and will lose in the World Series. It's best to keep on winning, even if winning isn't important."

Well, Connie Mack may be right, but the old theory that a team that coasts into a pennant may not be properly geared for the World Series is pretty well shot. On the other hand, so is the theory that a team which has just come out of a hard league fight for the pennant has the advantage of momentum. For the past two years the Yankees have led in the last month of the season and the Giants were forced to struggle down to the final week. Yet no advantage accrued to the National League.

Post Finals Set Today

Mrs. McNitt to Play Mrs. Scott in Match for Trophy

The twice delayed finals in The Washington Post Women's Handicap Match Play Championship are scheduled for the third time, this morning at Manor—9:30 o'clock.

Mrs. Arnold McNitt, the 18 handicap player from Congressional, will receive ten strokes from Mrs. Jack Scott, the two-time Colorado State champion and Maryland Amateur finalist, in the battle for the crown held by Marion Brown, who relinquished her title.

In a match scheduled to start five minutes before the championship encounter, Mrs. A. A. McNitt, Kenwood Club champion, will face Mrs. Harvey Cooper, of the host club, for the consolation prize.

The finals were originally scheduled for last Saturday but were postponed because of the rain and rescheduled for Tuesday. Rain the latter day forced a setback until today, when they will be played, barring a downpour.

The winner of the Scott-McNitt match will receive The Post trophy for a year, and a trophy for permanent possession. Mrs. Betty Beckley, medalist, will receive a suitable prize, donated by The Post. Other prizes, to be given by the association.

The six different winners in as many years will be crowned, with the handicap strokes giving Mrs. McNitt the edge but the fact that an N. B. C. WRC member has always won the title favoring Mrs. Scott.

Count Rossi on Air Tomorrow
Count Theo Rossi, speedboat winner of the 1938 Gold Cup and favorite in the President's Cup race, will be the principal speaker during a round-up radio broadcast over N. B. C. WRC outlet here tomorrow night at 6:45 Eastern standard time.

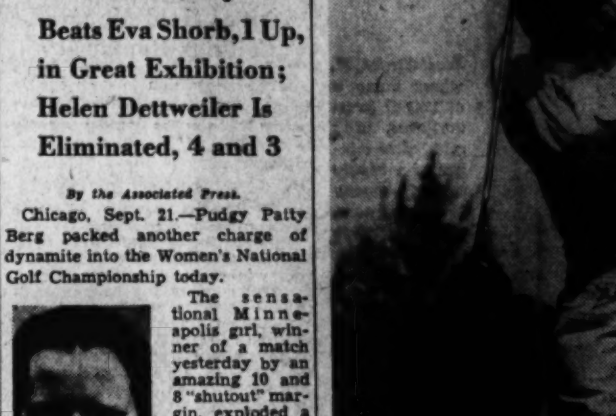

The broadcast on the eve of the Potomac River races was arranged by Stanley Bell and will co-star Gordon Hittman and Lee Everett as masters of ceremony. The format, an N. B. C. WRC announcer, will meet Everett, of the N. B. C. WMAF staff, in a special speedboat race for the announcer's trophy—an empty beer can.

Besides Count Rossi, other internationally famed pilots who will speak, include Jack and Maude Rutherford of Palm Beach and Long Island, Herbert Mendelson, 1935 President's Cup winner and owner of the ill-fated Notre Dame, and Jack (Pop) Cooper, 64-year-old youngster from the Middle West.

The tail of a hurricane swept through the East today upsetting the best laid plans of tennis officials, golf promoters, baseball managers and race track operators.

At Forest Hills, where the National Singles Championship was in progress—until Saturday—rain set a record for consecutive wash-outs by causing the fourth straight postponement of play. The courts were in such poor condition, the matches were postponed until Friday at the earliest.

Patty Berg Wins Match After Rally

PATTY BERG.

Medalist, Collegiate Champion in District Amateur

Chicago, Sept. 21.—Pudgy Patty Berg packed another charge of dynamite into the Women's National Golf Championship today.

The sensational Minneapolis girl, winner of a match yesterday by an amazing 10 and 8 "shutout" margin, exploded in a comeback today which amazed the gallery, advanced her to the quarter-finals and overshadowed all other developments of the day's second and third round battles.

Four down at the turn of her match with Eva Shorb, of Canton, Ohio, the Minnesota star rammed a blast of par and sub-par golf on the final nine to gain a one up third round victory. Wild on the out nine and victim of Miss Shorb's fine putting, Miss Berg again appeared headed for elimination from a tournament in which she twice has been runner-up.

Then she went to work. Coming up to the tenth tee, she slipped out of her rain-trousers, hitched up her belt, and went the next three holes with a par and two birdies. After two halves, she squared the battle at the fifteenth with a par and then halved the sixteenth. On the short seventh hole, the tee shot was straight to the green for a par 3 and an advantage as Miss Shorb's tee shot was bunkered.

They halved the eighteenth in par fives, leaving Patty still in the running for a crown which eluded her in the finals last year. In a morning match she had defeated Jean Bauer, East Providence, R. I., 4 and 3.

Helen Dettweiler, of Washington, last Washington representative in the tourney, went out of the running today by losing, 4 and 3, to Mary Goldwater, of Fort Worth, Tex.

Three up through seven holes, she became wild with her drives and took sixes to lose the eighth and ninth holes and by 1 up in the tenth. She three-putted the tenth to lose her advantage and from that point on was the victim of puts that repeatedly refused to drop. Meanwhile, Goldwater sank a 49-foot putt on the twelfth and continued her sensational work on the greens to leave the Washington player no openings.

Their cards:
Mrs. Goldwater—Out... 5 5 4 4 5 4 5 4 5—45
In... 5 5 4 4 5 4 5 4 5—42
Out... 5 5 5 4 4 4 5 4 6—42
In... 5 5 5 4 4 4 5 4 6—39

In addition to Miss Berg, other favorites came through as expected. Mrs. Estelle Lawson Page, of Chapel Hill, N. C., defending champion, whipped Helen Waterhouse, Warwick, R. I., 2 and 1, and then downed Betty Jameson, of San Antonio, Tex., 4 and 2.

Dorothy Traugott, of San Francisco, co-medalist with Mrs. Page, scored one up victory in 19 holes over Mrs. Diana Fishwick Critchley in the morning and then a 3 and 1 triumph over Mrs. Charles Newbold, Wichita, Kan., defeated Dorothy Kirby, of Atlanta, Ga., one up, 19 holes, and routed Kathryn Hemphill, of Columbia, S. C., 5 and 3.

Tomorrow's quarter-final pairings will be between Mrs. E. P. Rury, Dallas, Tex., and Peggy Graham, Hollywood, Calif.
Mrs. Rury eliminated Harriet Randall, Indianapolis, 3 and 3, and Mrs. McGonigal, of Indianapolis, last of the British contingent, two up, Miss Graham advanced by downing Jessie Anderson, of Perth, Scotland, in the morning 2 and 1, and Mrs. Harry McLaughlin, Great Neck, N. Y., 2 and 1.

In the lower bracket, Miss Traugott will oppose Miss Berg in what looms as a standout battle.

Yankees Lose 6th Straight As Chisox Take Game, 5-2

Bill Werber.

Three Errors Hand Chicago 5 Unearned Runs and Spoil Good Pitching by Gomez; Lou Gehrig Gets Homer

Chicago, Sept. 21.—The New York Yankees, still looking for their first victory as 1938 pennant winners, stretched their eight-year record losing streak to six games today by kicking away a 5-to-0 decision to the White Sox.

Three errors committed by the usually reliable second-base combination of Frankie Crosetti and Rookie Joe Gordon, handed the Sox five unearned runs on a platter and ruined an otherwise well-pitched ball game for Lou Gehrig.

As a result, Lefty trying for his eighth straight victory, suffered his twelfth defeat instead. He gave up only one hit and fanned seven, while his mates tagged Southpaw Thornton Lee for seven safeties.

Lou Gehrig connected for two hits, one of them his twenty-eighth homer of the year in the seventh inning, and Joe Glenn hit a double and two singles, driving in the only other Yankee run, but otherwise there was none of the fast, consistent hitting by the New Yorkers.

The Sox got away in front with two runs in the first inning, and sewed up the game with three more in the fourth. In the opening frame, with the bases loaded and two out, Gordon let Gerry Walker's grounder go through his legs and both runs scored. In the fourth, Crosetti's error let a runner get to third with one out. Then Gordon picked up a double-play ball and hit a base runner on the head with it. The ball bounced into the stands, one run came in, and two followed a moment later when Mike Kreevich singled to center.

John Burke, Goodwin 2d With 75s

Rippy, Pettijohn Fail to Qualify as Winds Send Scores Soaring to New High
By Merrell W. Whitley.
Bucking a miniature September gale that soared the scores to a new high in local competition, Billy Dettweiler, Georgetown golf team captain from the Congressional Club, won medalist honors in the District Amateur Championship yesterday with a 40, 35-75, over his home course. Dettweiler's par round on the incoming trip was the lone regulation nine of the day.

Trailing by a pair of shots was the last-minute entrant and immediate tournament favorite, Georgetown's Intercollegiate champion, Johnny Burke, who entered from the Capital Club, and Frank Goodwin, of the host club, who had identical scores of 33, 38, 77.

Between the hours of noon and 2:30 p. m. when the field left the first tee, the wind was blowing so hard that it was difficult to stand up without support, and as proof of its velocity, only one player, Frank Goodwin, in the field of 37, was able to par the 567-yard par 5 first hole. Goodwin was home with a drive and two full spoons, while Roger Peacock, also reached the green in 3, but three-putted.

Rippy Falls
Claude Rippy, Chevy Chase Invitation winner who was well liked to succeed Billy Shea as champion, shot himself out of the tournament with a 44, 43-87, four strokes over the 83s that played off for the first flight. Others who figured to make the championship bracket but failed were Charles Pettijohn and Louis Fuchs, who lost via the play-off route. Gene Pittman, with an 88 and C. Henry Cohen, Capital staff, with an 86.

Only six players bettered the 80 mark, and aside from the leaders, they were Russ Hollebaugh, Kenwood, with a 40-38-78, and Buddy Shattuck, of the host club, playing partners from Indian Spring, with like 41, 38-79s.

Roger Peacock, the former champion and highly-respected contender from Indian Spring, was on the verge of nonqualification after taking 44 strokes on the front nine where the wind and an erring putter cost him seven strokes to par, but he rallied with a 38 on the return trip for an 82, that made the grade by a stroke. The host club star, M. Parker Nolan, duplicated Peacock's comeback feat.

Ross Wins Berth
David "Scotty" Ross, young Capital Club player, won a first flight berth in a play-off with Charles Pettijohn, Capital's Louis Fuchs, Congressional and L. J. Goode, Columbia. Fuchs and Goode were eliminated on the first hole with sixes, the former missing a 15-inch putt for his par.

Ross and Pettijohn were wild with their first two shots on the second hole, both pitched within 8 feet of the cup, and both knocked in. Ross put for the par and win, while Pettijohn missed.

Dettweiler deserved his medalist honors as his golf was several strokes better than the field. After a bad start, he rallied not to be considered in the wind, he played the last 13 holes in even par, and the last 8 one under. He started with a 6 that was par yesterday, but one over on the card, three-putted the third green, and had an unplayable lie on the fifth.

He parred the remainder of the holes on the front nine and won the match in the second round. He was over the tenth green in two and down in five, one over, regained the stroke with a 20-foot birdie putt on the twelfth, and was par in for the medalist.

Burke and his Georgetown teammate, Pettijohn, were last-minute entries and considerably strengthened the field. The intercollegiate holder, who had a dead end in the first round, took the second time and State Amateur at Louisville, had three birdies at Dropsie, strokes to par on eight holes, and finished with a 77 that tied Goodwin.

The luck of the draw sends the defending champion, Billy Shea, who qualified easily with 40-38-79, against Roger Peacock, the popular choice for the crown. The match this morning overshadowed the others, although Hollebaugh vs. Nolan Dettweiler against Earl Skinner, the Columbia youngster, who lost 4-3 to Pettijohn, and Burke against Leo Cullinan, who will attract considerable attention.

Down In Quarles Gets Decision Over Lou Gevinson

Front

Iron Horses

New York, Sept. 21.—I think it was the late Tex Rickard who first made the claim that it never rains in Madison Square Garden, and his statement certainly has been substantiated during the current week.

VIDMER.

It has rained in the Polo Grounds, and as a result the Pirates practically are floating in the National League championship on a tidal wave.

It has rained in the West Side stadium so long and so hard that the semfinalists in the national championships may have to switch their entries to the veterans' division before they get a chance to play for any titles.

And it has rained in Belmont Park so insistently that the racing commission is considering making boat races perfectly legal, if not preferable.

But it hasn't rained in Madison Square Garden. Not a drop has seeped through the roof and the wheels go 'round and 'round, like the music of another year. Day and night the six-day bike race goes on and the crowds come in to seek shelter and remain to sit fascinated at the closest thing to perpetual motion that the sphere of sports has been able to produce.

They sit and watch the teams Harry Mendel has paired—Le-tourner and Guimbretiere, the Peden Brothers, Walthour and Crossley, George and Moretti, and all the rest. But strangely they have to look all way back to the end of the parade to find the favorite, for Gerard Debaets, the Belgian, is riding last.

Debaets may not have been the favorite in the betting when the race started and he certainly isn't the favorite to win now. But he's the crowd's favorite every day and night, as he has been through the years, spring and fall.

The Hat Trick
He has been riding in the six-day races at the Garden for 13 years, and in that time he has never failed to delight the members of the midnight watch. In fact two weeks a year he is more responsible for keeping the businessmen out late at night than all the glamorous girls in the Paradise, Hollywood and Casa Manana. Still, they never seem to grow tired of his antics.

When the hours grow late and the pace slackens to a monotonous grind, Jerry Debaets always thinks up something to amuse the customers and hold the crowd. Lo, the poor first-year fan who leaves his hat on the rail in those hours, for Debaets rides by and nonchalantly snatches it off. Then he starts bending it into queer shapes, turning it inside out, ripping off the ribbon and biting at the brim.

This never fails to amuse the customers—all but one. The owner generally howls in anger while the rest howl in glee. But it's all in fun and when the owner just about reaches the boiling point, Debaets rides by again and tosses him his hat—as good as new. The trick, of course, is that he switches the customer's hat for another when he reached the opposite side of the track where the owner couldn't see.

But Debaets has other tricks in his repertoire just as amusing to the midnight watch, who are easily amused anyway. One of them is his riding ability, for he has won 19 races, finished second five times, third seven times and fourth eight times, a record no current rider can match.

Leg Wounds
He is last at the moment in the current contest, but only because his original partner, Regoni, became indisposed and had to quit. Debaets then teamed up with Audy and had to take the position of his new partner, which was last. He went back to the end of the field, but he can go back much farther than that. He can go all the way back to the last war, and what a story he has to tell of his boyhood in Belgium during the dangerous days of 1914-15.

Jerry was just a lad when the war came and hardly was aware that it had come at all until the town in which he lived was taken over by the German army advancing toward Paris. He was taken prisoner and put to work in the railroad yards, but he was to put it mildly, rather reluctant to go. In fact he was so reluctant that he used his head as a battering ram, ran into a German officer, broke his nose and cut his chin.

Then he started to run away, the guards fired twice. One shot went into one leg, the second into the other and young Gerard Debaets was halted in his tracks. They tossed the belligerent young Belgian into prison and as it happened he landed in a cell with some spies who had been caught sending messages by carrier pigeon and were doomed to die. Four of them were taken out and shot, but apparently something interrupted the procedure, for they didn't get around to young Jerry.

However, there must have lingered some memory of his associations in the cell, for later, when he was put back to work in the railroad yards, as a switchman, knowledge of the train movements behind the German lines became known to the allies, and he was accused of sending out the information.

Bob Mathias Marks Debut By Knockout

Referee Stops Battle in 2d; Dell Beats Bookman; Perry, Scoggins Win

By Lewis F. Atchison.

Lou Gevinson's static star, at one time the brightest satellite in the city's pugilistic firmament, waned and all but flickered out last night in the close humid atmosphere of Turner's Arena, where he dropped a ten-round decision to Norman Quarles, of Richmond.

It was no contest. Quarles won the last six rounds on the official score sheet with hardly a glove laid on him. Gevinson took the second and third by disputed margins, and the first and fourth were even. The ultimate result never was in doubt after the fifth.

Gevinson, a preflight betting favorite of as much as 9-5, was a pitiful figure in the closing rounds. His prominent nose was painfully swollen. It looked like a ship's rudder. An old wound over the corner of his left eye was ripped open. And there were bruises on his body.

That's where Quarles scored his victory—in the body, pumping gloveful after gloveful of punishment to the Southwest's lad's battered midsection. He got nothing in return, for Gevinson's ineffectual punches as bad as the day he turned to professional ranks to seek fame and gold.

Quarles fought a clever bout. Navy's motion was wasted, as he coldly measured his man, watched him walk in and ripped both hands to the body. Gevinson, to his credit, was punching at the final bell, still trying. But they were feeble arms and impotent gloves he waved aimlessly at his opponent.

Earlier in the fight when he had his full strength and complete command of his faculties, Lou uncoiled vicious lefts at Quarles, any one of which would have felled him. But none landed. Quarles took 'em on the elbow, blocked them with his gloves, or pulled out of range.

Quarles Carless
Quarles evidently took his assignment too lightly in the first few rounds, and was tagged with several stinging rights on the cheek. Blood trickled from an old wound over his right eye in the second round when he was butted in a clinch. This, and a puffy flesh near his left eye constituted his lone damage.

Quarles opened up in the third, after starting slowly and cautiously, and shook Gevinson to his heels with three beautiful right hands to the head.

The blows slowed up the District gladiator perceptibly, and turned the tide of battle. Gevinson continued to lead, but he seemed to hesitate before risking more of those jarring punches to the head.

Gevinson Opens Up
Gevinson opened with a rush in the fourth, letting go with a dynamite-laden left, but Quarles covered nicely and went to work on the mid-section. Gevinson dug a left to the stomach, but Quarles jumped back at him with a right that made him blink. A brace of punching left hooks to the body, and more infighting, in which Gevinson had all the worst of it, marked the beginning of Gevinson's finish. He was a beaten man after that.

Gevinson came out fast again in the fifth, whipping both hands high to the forehead, but Quarles locked him in a clinch. The Richmond boy shook him up with both hands to the head, stepped back and cracked him with a left. He topped it off with a grinding right uppercut to the jaw at close quarters.

Gevinson ripped a left hook to the stomach, and Quarles retaliated with two straight rights to the body. Gevinson missed with a left and Quarles cracked him with two more right hooks on the ribs. Gevinson was missing badly now, and Quarles was playing his hand cautiously, wasting no efforts.

Quarles Fights Close
Quarles fell to infighting with enthusiasm in the sixth, making Gevinson miss before stepping in close and massaging his midsection with both hands. His gloves worked methodically and relentlessly as a court ballpounding for order, and their effect was plainly visible in Gevinson's anxious countenance.

Gevinson showed unmistakable signs of defeat in the seventh, snorting like a draft horse as his wind came in short, harassed draughts. You could see his nostrils quiver as he sucked in air. His eyes blinked as Quarles' busy fists landed in the midsection.

Quarles staggered Gevinson with his first punch in both the eighth and ninth rounds. He gave him an unmerciful drubbing around the body, and cracked him with sharp lefts. He pulled Gevinson's mouth ajar, bewildered him with a vicious left in the ninth, and then toyed with him. Quarles didn't appear to be trying in the tenth, but seemed content to coast in to victory.

Bob Mathias made a sensational professional debut, scoring a technical knockout over Johnny Tejera, of Richmond, 142½, after 1:35 of the fight.

A Quarrelsome Quarles in Action

Anacostia, Gonzaga Open Season Today

Will Pry Lid Off Grid Schedule at 3:30 P. M. at Eastern Stadium; Purple Favored to Win Contest by Reason of Great Showing Last Year

The opening bell of the scholastic football season will be rung this afternoon at Eastern Stadium, where a green Anacostia High team plays host to Gonzaga. Game time is 3:30 p. m.

Gonzaga, which last year experienced one of the best seasons in the history of the school, is favored to trounce Anacostia, which only this year is being initiated into the Inter-High series. The Indians were represented on the gridiron last fall but did not play any Inter-High games.

Despite the fact that Coach Orrel Mitchell has lost 13 lettermen, Gonzaga is feared by all scholastic teams in this sector and is generally regarded as the team to beat for the city championship. Last year Gonzaga swept through all opposition with the exception of Eastern, which captured the Inter-High crown. Critics discounted this reverse because of inclement weather conditions, which appeared to hamper the running game of the Eye Streeters.

Has 3 Letter Men

This year, Mitchell has three letter men on hand, in addition to a transfer, and it is around these four veterans that he is building his team. Eddie Shea, an abbreviated quarterback, heads the group of veterans into action today. Shea exhibited remarkable precision last year in the ball-carrying department. Other experienced men in the Gonzaga line-up will be Brian Sheridan, a former center who has been converted into a guard; Lane O'Donnell, 6-foot end, and Joe Street, a transfer from Tech.

Coach Rolland Lund, of Anacostia, had an herculean task confronting him when practice started this year. From a large list of candidates, Lund had to select 11 men capable of holding their own in inter-high competition. Most of the material was green but willing, and it will be a spirited group of youngsters wearing the Anacostia uniform this afternoon.

Experienced Backfield
The Indians will have seven lettermen in their line-up, including four experienced backfield men, and it is upon the ball-carrying department that Anacostia will depend. Tom Seaman, "Flash" Gordon, Joe Farmer and Art Faircloth make up the quartet. Most of the linemen are inexperienced.

Dusek and Garibaldi Settle Score Tonight

Grudge Mat Battle Slated for Arena; Joe Believes He Was Victim of Raw Deal Last Week; All-Star Card to Be Offered by Promoter Turner

By Lewis F. Atchison.

A question of momentous import will be settled tonight at Turner's Arena, where Gino Garibaldi and Joe Dusek meet in the feature brawl of the proprietor's weekly wrestling review. The question is, "did Garibaldi get a long count last week, or did Joseph get a raw deal?"

Dusek answers in the affirmative on both counts, charging the referee showed partiality in awarding the decision to Garibaldi on a foul, after giving him a 5-minute rest while he reclined on the concrete arena floor.

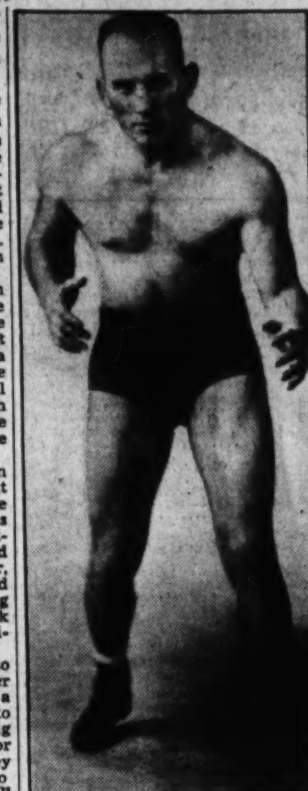

"They give that bum a ring-side seat," Joe howled, "An' ask him how he feels, and whether he wants to get back in the ring and rattle me? What is this, anyway, a first-aid station? They, I mean that fat guy refereeing, shoulda counted 10, and if he wasn't back in the ring at 10, give me the decision. I don't believe the referee can count over three."

Garibaldi was propelled through the ropes by a swift kick in the ala—beg pardon, the ribs. He made a 1-point landing on the left eyebrow and promptly grabbed a leg and started to moan. He groaned three bars of the funeral march, while Dusek remained in the ring threatening to take the audience and bump its collective head together.

Mr. Bortnick, the third party in the ring, was very solicitous about Garibaldi's condition, and when he reached five and Gino's moans were reaching the crescent, started counting in fractions. He could have counted a thousand, however, and Gino wouldn't have returned to the ring. Dusek, already chafing at the bit, exploded when Bortnick finally awarded the palm to Garibaldi.

Added importance is attached to the bout since Promoter Joe Turner hinted that the winner may get a shot at Everett Marshall or Bronko Nagurski, two of the reigning champions, who are headed East for winter quartering. Just when they will arrive Turner neglected to say, but it will be late in the fall or early winter.

An all-star card has been arranged in support of tonight's feature, with John Katon and Red Ryan booked in a co-feature. Chris Zaharias, brother of George, and Hank Barber are also on the menu. Red Vagone, an Italian importation (vintage of 1912) will make his first appearance here in a duel with "Fat Man" Maynard, the Boston strong boy. And the final event (as we're writing it) will bring together that villain of the old school of bludgeoning, Bibber McCoy, against George Kondylis.

Third Party Runs in 3d Place; Winner's Backers Protest the Mutuel Pay-off.

By Walter Haight.
A Staff Correspondent.
Havre de Grace, Md., Sept. 21.—There is some doubt as to the sire of Dixieland, a little filly owned by D. B. Midkiff, but it was agreed after today's fifth race that she is of more than ordinary ability in the mud. The 3-year-old, by either Chicle or Mad Hatter, turned on the heat through the stretch to win by a length over Mrs. Nate Ray's Rissa in the Jarrettville Purse, feature of the program. Third Party was third in the group of a half-dozen of the better sprinters contesting at 6 furlongs.

The Runner (No. 8), owned by A. Della Porter, wins going away over Anglo Sax, the property of Mr. W. E. Martin, in the fourth race. With Apprentice A. Page aboard, The Runner came with a terrific rush near the end.

Special License Fee Paid to Baltimore County for Last 20 Years Is Ruled Out by Court

Baltimore, Sept. 21.—The $3,000 daily special license fee the Maryland Jockey Club, operator of Pimlico Race Track, has paid for the last 20 years to Baltimore County was held unconstitutional today. The Jockey Club has paid approximately $1,500,000 to the county during that time at $3,000 for each racing day.

At The Post
Selections at Havre de Grace
Jockey George Seabo came back to the jockeys room and claimed somebody had hit him in the head with a whip. "Nobody hit you with a whip," remarked another rider. "You were struck by that guy casting for trout up there by the three-quarter pole." Yippy, the hand-picked favorite, was a pathetic sight yesterday afternoon. After devouring hot dogs and running around in the rain all morning, he retired to a corner and went into a sound sleep. Some gas artist put an empty whisky bottle under his crossed front paws and a cigarette butt in the corner of his mouth. Yippy looked all the part of the "curse of drink" and slept serenely for some two hours. Apprentice Bessie Hatcher had been suspended for the remainder of the meeting for roughing Lucas Dupps, another apprentice. On the seventh race on Tuesday, it is a tough break for the Kentucky boy who seemed assured of plenty of good mounts here. Jockey Gilbert is setting the pace for the jockeys here in the race for the $500 gold watch. When Jockey Jackson fell off his horse soon after the break, somebody yelled, "Man overboard." As far as the favorite players were concerned, Jockey Johnny Gilbert could have cancelled all mounts. He put up a pitiful exhibition on Rex Flag. And was Sally Sidesaddle pearly. She prefers Sea Gull today and Cocker Mike favors Slump.

Our Guest Selector

Our Guest Selector for today is Ben Bernie, the "Old Master" who is holding forth at the Earle Theater this week. Bernie, cornered just before he went on the stage, was in a jangle mood as far as horses were concerned. A few hours before he showed up at Havre de Grace, his colors had been carried to a victory by a 3-year-old named Wes. "It was a maiden victory for Wes and the $19 mutuel made it all the more convincing," Bernie was quoted as saying. "I have been keeping off these without a moment's hesitation. Yowah, these should all be money today."

How to Torture Your Wife

Bob Burns Says—

I read the other day where one of our lawmakers wanted to put through a bill to make doctors use plain English names instead of Latin so that people'd know what was the matter with 'em and what they was takin' for it.

I had one uncle who kept losin' jobs on account of ill health, and finally his wife sent him to the doctor. My uncle says, "Now Doc, don't give me none of them technical Latin names for my ailment—tell me in plain English what's the matter with me."

The doctor examined him and says, "All right, I'll tell you—you're jest plain lazy." My uncle says, "All right but can you give me a technical name for it so I can tell my wife?"

Rail Inquiry Is Delayed by Vote on Strike

New Group Adjourns; Ballot Count Monday; 'Emergency' Expected

Imminence of next week's strike vote on the railroad wage dispute yesterday forced indefinite adjournment of the six-man committee named by the President to study the carriers' ills.

Less than 24 hours after Mr. Roosevelt designated the group, Carl R. Gray, vice chairman of the Union Pacific System, announced the next meeting will be postponed "to a date later to be fixed."

Gray, who was named on the committee Tuesday by President Roosevelt, is the father of Dr. Howard K. Gray, 37, who operated on the President's son, James, at the Mayo Clinic earlier in the month.

Speaking for the informal committee of three company and three union executives, Gray said that "owing to the pendency of wage proceedings and as the President has indicated he will appoint a fact-finding committee next week," the time of the labor executives will be fully occupied through most of October.

'Emergency' Expected

"There was a general discussion at today's meeting of an approach and the methods which will be followed in pursuing the study, the President has asked to undertake."

The President, in appointing the committee, has passed over the wage issue, saying it was only one phase of the broader rail problem which he asked the group to attempt to solve.

At the same time Mr. Roosevelt had indicated his intention of using regular machinery of the mediation act in attempting to settle the pay dispute. Strike ballots, growing out of the 15 per cent wage cuts ordered by the roads, will be counted next Monday. The President is expected promptly to proclaim a national rail emergency and appoint a fact-finding board, automatically maintaining the rail status quo for another 60 days.

Labor Heads Confer

Rail labor executives met yesterday at the Hamilton Hotel to receive reports on Tuesday's White House railroad conference from the three men named by the President to represent them on the informal committee exploring the entire rail problem.

Later in the day Gray announced on behalf of both union and railroad members of the President's committee that further conferences must wait on the wage dispute procedure. Union leaders are said to have insisted that the pay issue be first met.

Barring further action by the President under the mediation act, both the 15 per cent cut ordered by the carriers, and a general strike by the rail unions, would become effective October 1.

Prevent Tie-up

To prevent a national transportation tie-up, the Mediation Board is empowered to ask the President to intervene with a national emergency proclamation. "This course the President apparently has determined to follow. The fact-finding board to be appointed by him would investigate both sides of the controversy and in 30 days recommend a basis of settlement. No walkout could be staged or pay cut imposed before December 1.

Resumption of committee conferences on the financial plight of the railroads will be sought in time to formulate a program of relief for the roads in time for legislative action early next session.

Besides Gray, members of the committee are M. W. Clement, president of the Pennsylvania Railroad; Ernest E. Norris, president of the Southern Railway; George M. Harrison, chairman of the Railway Labor Executives Association; D. B. Robertson, president of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Engineers; and B. M. Jewell, president of the railway employees department of the A. F. of L.

U. S. Finds Small Colleges Overplay 'Heart Disease'

The U. S. Public Health Service yesterday warned college physicians against cursory labeling as heart disease students' symptoms not justifying this diagnosis.

Reviewing reports from colleges showing an unusually high incidence of rheumatic heart disease, Dr. O. F. Hedley, assistant surgeon of the health service, concluded that the actual percentage of cases in smaller colleges was not as high as the figures indicated.

"The tendency in mass diagnosis of rheumatic heart disease is toward over-diagnosis," he declared. "In sharp contrast to pulmonary tuberculosis, the greater care exercised in the diagnosis of rheumatic heart disease, the fewer cases are found."

"Trained cardiologists are, as a rule, less likely to diagnose rheumatic heart disease than are physicians who encounter cardiac abnormalities less frequently."

Dr. Hedley declared the "diagnosis of a functional murmur as heart disease" may be nearly as unfortunate as the failure to diagnose heart disease.

"Not only may the student forego many pleasurable and useful activities in college," he said, "but his entire career may be influenced."

"The era has long passed, if it ever existed, when any but the most obvious forms of heart disease could be diagnosed by the ceremonial laying on of a stethoscope."

Reports of 104,163 health examinations in 88 colleges showed an incidence of rheumatic heart disease of 11.6 per 1,000 students. Dr. Hedley believed 6.4 per cent—the figure reported by 14 large universities—was more nearly correct. Difficulties in diagnosis in smaller colleges, he suggested, were responsible in large degree for the higher figure.

Inquest Set Today On Beating Death

A coroner's jury this morning will investigate the death last Sunday of John Edward Baker, 29, of 3340 N street northwest, who died of a fractured skull, thought to have been received in a fight.

Several youths now in custody of the police, will appear before the jury which will determine whether Baker died of injuries suffered in a fall or was murdered in a robbery attempt. A woman arrested earlier was released yesterday.

Funeral plans were halted Monday when local police ordered Baker's body returned from an undertaker's establishment in Clarendon, Va., for an autopsy. The post mortem disclosed death was due to a fractured skull.

Investigation disclosed Baker was in a fight at Fifth and G streets northwest last Saturday morning.

Truck Strikers Agree to Truce

New York, Sept. 21 (P)—a three-day truce in the unsanctioned strike of truck drivers which has paralyzed trucking since last Thursday was approved by more than a thousand striking workers at a meeting tonight.

The truce was accepted by the men with the assurance that if by Saturday midnight an agreement is not reached a legal strike vote will be taken next Sunday and last Thursday's walkout repeated next Monday morning.

Dr. Hart to Decide On Bishop Call

The Rev. Dr. Oliver J. Hart, rector of St. John's Episcopal Church, elected Bishop of Delaware at the diocesan convocation in Dover last Tuesday, said yesterday he will visit Wilmington on Monday to give church authorities his decision in the matter. Dr. Hart, who will return late Monday night, would not indicate whether he plans to accept the appointment, which carries an annual salary of $7,000 above expenses.

Last year he declined acceptance of the position of bishop co-adjutor of the Central New York Diocese, to which he had also been elected. He served overseas as chaplain of the First Division during the late war.

Syphilis Pamphlet Fast Becoming A 'Best Seller'

An ordinary pamphlet has forged rapidly into the "best seller" class. Public Health Service officials boasted yesterday, until today the presses of the Government Printing Office can hardly turn copies out fast enough to meet the demand.

The pamphlet is called "Syphilis, Its Cause, Its Spread, Its Cure." Since the first printing last May 850,000 copies have been printed. Ohio and Illinois alone accounted for 100,000 apiece.

Government officials are especially proud of the pamphlet's phenomenal circulation because it is paid, not free. Approximately 50,000 were distributed as samples to private physicians, health organizations, societies, etc., but the remainder have brought the government $1 per hundred copies.

Common Sense About Constipation

A doctor would tell you that the best thing to do with any ailment is to get at its cause. If you're constipated, don't fiddle with makeshift remedies. Find out what's giving you the trouble!

Chances are you won't have to look very far if you eat just the things most people do. Most likely you don't get enough "bulk"! And "bulk" doesn't mean just a lot of food. It means a kind of food that isn't consumed in the body, but leaves a soft "bulky" mass in the intestines and helps a bowel movement.

If this is what you lack, your ticket is crisp crunchy Kellogg's All-Bran for breakfast. It contains the "bulk" you need plus the intestinal tonic, vitamin B₁, and it's not a drug, not a medicine! Eat All-Bran every day, drink plenty of water, and join the "regulars"! Made by Kellogg's in Battle Creek. Sold by every grocer.
